Police file murder charge against estranged husband

Bishop being held on $1 million cash bond

by RALPH B. DAVIS
MANAGING EDITOR

As expected, police have formally charged a Floyd County man with the stabbing death of his estranged wife.

Dwayne Earl Bishop, 40, of Teaberry, was charged with murder Sunday following an investigation by the Floyd County Sheriff's Office and Kentucky State Police.

The charge stems from the discovery of Carolyn Bishop's body at an abandoned strip mine site at Ligon.

Carolyn Bishop, 32, of Beaver, had been reported as missing by her family. Police have said she was last seen alive at 9:30 p.m. last Thursday, riding on a motorcycle with Dwayne Bishop. Dwayne Bishop was later seen riding the motorcycle alone and he was arrested later that night on a DUI charge.

Acting on a tip, sheriff's deputies and a state police trooper discovered Carolyn Bishop's body at the mine site, lying over a hillside, shortly after midnight Saturday morning. Police believe she was killed and her body was pushed over the hillside in an effort to conceal it.

Carolyn Bishop's body has been sent to Frankfort for an autopsy. While results of that autopsy have not been released, Sheriff John K. Blackburn said Saturday that marks on her body appeared consistent

Highways safer over holiday

Times Staff Report

Officials with Kentucky State Police post 9 in Pikeville are reporting a safer Labor Day weekend on local roads than that of a year ago.

Police reported Tuesday that there were no fatal accidents in the Big Sandy area during the Labor Day weekend.

Statewide, there were five deaths in five separate accidents on Kentucky highways, fewer than half of the previous year's number. In 1999, 12 people lost their lives on Kentucky roads during the Labor Day holiday weekend.

But despite the lack of deadly crashes during the busy traffic period, police still had their hands full.

According to statistics released by the Pikeville post, state troopers:

- made 23 DUI arrests,
- wrote 46 speeding tickets,
- cited 40 people for seatbelt violations,
- issued 10 child restraint citations,
- assisted 56 motorists, and
- worked three alcohol-related wrecks.

The Labor Day weekend is measured from 6 p.m. Friday until 11:59 p.m. Monday.

Mayo Moments

by LINDA LYON

Former employees of Mayo, heads-up! The Alumni committee is organizing a picnic for all of you and your families. If you have ever worked for Mayo or if you have a deceased family member who worked for Mayo, please contact Ruth Perry for more information. Her phone number is 606/789-5321, ext 320. Her email is ruth.perry@kctcs.net.

The picnic will be September 23, at noon, at the Jenny Wiley State Resort Park, Dewey Dam Spillway, Shelter #3. Please contact Ruth Perry to let us know how many will be in your party by September 8, to assist us with meal arrangements.

I want to thank Ruth Perry, Gary Lewis, George Ramey and all the rest of the Alumni Team for their work on this project. The members of this group are very important to us. They represent part of the rich heritage of Mayo. A solid foundation of caring instructors and staff has been largely responsible for Mayo's longevity.

We have finished our first month of the fall semester and things are looking good on the campuses of Mayo Technical College. Enrollment is up and we are settling into classwork and school business.

Everyone has worked hard on enrollment and preparing for the semester's work. On behalf of Bobby McCool, I thank those who put in extra time to assist with enrollment marketing. It takes a whole team to produce the best results and you have been a part of that team.

The search for a president for this KCTCS region has come to the final interview stage. Over the next few weeks, presidential candidates will visit the MAYO TC and Prestonsburg CC campuses (PRECC) as a part of the final selection process.

The new president will be the CEO for Mayo Technical College, Prestonsburg Community College and the Pikeville Campus which houses both college branches. This will be the first president to preside over both technical and community colleges in eastern Kentucky. This will be the first time that both PCC and Mayo have been under the leadership of a single president although both colleges have worked together for some time now on services, programs and business areas.

The search committee for the new president is made up of members of the PCC staff, Mayo TC staff and the communities.

The library is open now for those of you who need its services. The library is located on the second floor of building F. Misty Green Jackson is the librarian. She has worked with us for a couple of years now in other capacities while waiting for the library to be completed.

She is a fully qualified librarian with degrees and credentials from the University of Kentucky and certified by the state of Kentucky. She can assist you with any library need you may have. She is also heading up the COE Self Study for accreditation that we are now engaged in.

The Cisco Program is about to get underway at Mayo. If you are interested in this program and have not contacted us, you need to do so right away. The classes will begin soon and there are things you need to do prior to the class start. Call Harold Burton at ext. 225 or contact Tammy Blackburn by email at tammy.blackburn@kctcs.net.

It is important that we hear from you right away, if you want to be included in this class. There is a possibility that we may teach the class in both the Paintsville and Pikeville Campus locations. It will depend on how many students we have in each area. Please call or email us today.

We welcome new folks to our staff. Diana Anderson has joined the business and office faculty in Paintsville. Randell O. Haney is the new construction technology (plumbing and masonry) instructor at the Pikeville Campus. Charles Moore is the new industrial technology instructor in Pikeville. We also welcome Rachel Mills as the receptionist in Paintsville.

Mayo is looking for a part-time instructor for hospital coding. If you are interested, contact Harold Burton at 606/789-5321, ext. 225.

For more than 20 years, Paintsville resident Sara Shafer has been a regular client of the cosmetology department at Mayo. A couple of years ago, she started presenting a $100 scholarship to a deserving second semester student. Selection is made by cosmetology department faculty based on grades, attendance, overall attitude and the needs of the student.

This year's recipient is Debbie Fluty, a second semester student from Lovely in Martin County.

CHIROPRACTIC OUTLOOK

Dr. Phillip R. Simpson

CHIROPRACTIC RELIEVES TENSION HEADACHES

Millions of Americans take pain relief medications to fight off headaches. These pharmaceutical products offer temporary relief at best and sometimes cause various unpleasant side effects. Why do we get headaches? Studies report there are several possible reasons. These include allergies, nutritional deficiencies, improper eating habits, hormonal imbalances and, of course, stress.

A growing number of studies show that a high percentage of headaches, especially those from tension, are caused by the dysfunction of nerves in the upper region of the cervical spine (neck). These reports also point to the long-term effectiveness of chiropractic manipulation in relieving headache symptoms. If you frequently get headaches, schedule a comprehensive evaluation with your doctor of chiropractic. Regular adjustments may be an effective solution to your neck and spine problems and to splitting headaches.

The new AIDS crisis

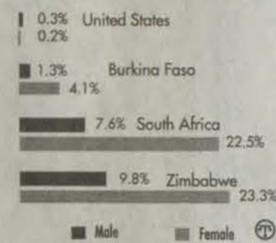

(NAPS) — A plague is sweeping sub-Saharan Africa—11,000 people contract HIV/AIDS every day, 24.5 million are infected, 14.8 million have died, and more than 12 million children have been orphaned.

While some Americans view the African AIDS crisis as a distant problem, a growing number of experts see this crisis as critical to U.S. interests and as a moral call to arms.

Top U.S. security analysts found that HIV/AIDS has strong potential to induce "state failure in [Africa's] partial democracies." With sub-Saharan Africa currently accounting for $6 billion annually in U.S. exports, its 600 million people represent a critical future market. A destabilized region would be incapable of preserving its economy and environment—a reality with global implications.

"The African AIDS crisis is this generation's opportunity to define what it means to be American in the 21st Century," said James Wagoner, President of Advocates for Youth, a nonprofit organization that works to prevent pregnancy, HIV/AIDS and sexually transmitted disease among young people in the U.S. and internationally. "African expertise and commitment, partnering with American support and investment, can be an antidote to the belief that

Prevalence of HIV percentage of young people aged 15-24 who are infected with HIV in selected countries—1999

Medically accurate education gives young people the tools to act responsibly and protect their health.

HIV/AIDS is inevitable and must simply run its course."

While the scale of the problem is vast, Mr. Wagoner has seen the face of hope in grassroots African volunteer organizations focusing on the continent's most valuable resource—its young people. "Young people of whom there are 200 million in Africa—can be mobilized to combat HIV/AIDS with the most effective weapon we have—prevention," said Wagoner.

For example, in Burkina Faso, village councils comprised of eight young people and two elders, develop parent-child communication programs about sex and strategies for improving access to reproductive health services.

In South Africa, the LoveLife Project, a collaboration of government and grassroots organizations, has launched a mass media campaign to get families talking about sex and HIV/AIDS and to give young people the tools to act responsibly.

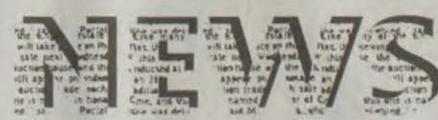

These and many other projects have received support from U.S. philanthropic leaders such as the Packard, Mellon, Ford, Summit, and Kaiser Family Foundations and the Wallace Global Fund.

As an organization that supports efforts that help young people make informed and responsible decisions about their sexual and reproductive health, Advocates for Youth applauds these efforts and highlights the need for more programs.

"These foundations have led the way. Congress needs to increase U.S. investments in stopping this disease. At a time when the National Security Council warns of fallen governments, ethnic wars, and destroyed market economies, our government can and should do more," concluded Wagoner.

For more information on this issue, contact Advocates for Youth at www.advocatesforyouth.org.

New hope for patients diagnosed with early breast cancer

(NAPSA) — Now more than ever, women are acting on expert advice to have a yearly mammogram starting at age 40. As a result, 40,000 women each year are diagnosed with early forms of breast cancer that in the past, without mammography, would not have been diagnosed. Very early breast cancer that is contained in the milk ducts of the breast is called ductal carcinoma in situ (DCIS). DCIS is very common, representing 20 percent of all newly diagnosed breast cancer. Despite this, a recent study found that only six percent of women have ever heard of DCIS.

Ellen Soren Beda, 54, had surgery to remove her DCIS, and was treated with Nolvadex®, also called tamoxifen citrate, by her doctor. Nolvadex, made by AstraZeneca, is the first FDA approved medication shown to reduce the risk of invasive breast cancer in women diagnosed with DCIS. The medication is prescribed after breast surgery and radiation therapy.

"I was scared to learn from my doctor that I had DCIS, because I had never heard of it before and it sounded serious," said Ms. Beda. "Now I know that it is a survivable type of breast cancer and there are treatment options available to help make sure that the cancer does not come back."

Physicians regard DCIS as a "clinical marker" indicating that changes occurring in the breast could lead to invasive cancer—but may not. Should an invasive cancer develop, treatment could include additional surgery and possible chemotherapy.

COMPUTER

NEWS AND NOTES

(NAPSA)-Too much information can be a bad thing-especially online, where hackers can use your personal information to your disadvantage.

By stealing such information, thieves can apply for credit cards and loans in your name; hack into and damage your home computer; and threaten the safety of your children. Fortunately, there are ways to guard online privacy. Here are ten easy tips to get you started:

1. Check the Web site's privacy policy before doing business with them. Privacy policies should be in plain English. If one does not exist, look elsewhere.

2. Find out what information will be collected and how it will be used. The privacy policy should tell you this.

3. Never give vital information, such as a credit card number, over anything but a secure connection. Before you provide sensitive information, the site should tell you that you are moving into a secure-encrypted-area.

4. Check information about yourself. You should be able to review your information and, if necessary, correct it.

5. Balance your privacy against the value of the services offered. Some sites will ask for information in exchange for access to them or higher levels of service. Decide whether they ask too much.

6. What are the cookies cooking up? Cookies are small data files Web sites use to store information in your computer, such as your password, and track your progress through the site.

In most instances, cookies are used to provide valuable personalized services. However, cookie technology can also abuse privacy. End users cannot usually tell how specific cookies are being used.

Your browser's cookie control option can tell you when a site wants to give you a cookie and get your permission.

Standard browser software lets you disable cookies, but doing so may limit access to some sites. Check the cookies already on your hard drive and delete those you don't want.

7. Email is forever. Email is sent electronically, and all it takes is a push of the "forward" button to send to anyone. Even when you "delete" email, its ghost remains in your computer and can be recovered by, for example, your employer or anyone with a subpoena. Keep that in mind when you write.

8. Consider encryption. There are programs to encrypt email, but you have to make sure all your recipients have the key. Your messages can still be recalled from your computer, and you can't be sure that your decrypted messages won't be forwarded.

9. Check hack attacks. Digital Subscriber Line (DSL) links speed service, but they are always on when your computer is on, leaving your files vulnerable to hackers. Protect yourself by installing firewall software on your PC.

10. Remember what mom said about talking to strangers. Chat rooms can lead spammers back to your address, loading you up with unwanted email.

Privacy remains a matter of personal comfort. Some feel that their privacy is invaded by third party advertisements generated by a site they visit.

Others see such advertising as a trade-off for services obtained at no or reduced costs. Some people see cookies as an electronic Big Brother tracking their every move.

Others don't really care, as long as the records cannot be traced to them personally.

The choice should always be yours. If it isn't, exploit one of the principal virtues of the online economy: there are plenty of alternatives. Peter Reid is vice president of the Privacy Center of Expertise at NCR's Teradata Division.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette smoke contains carbon monoxide.

There Will Be No Floyd County Slone Mountain Squirrel Festival!!!

Shriners open new worlds for special needs kids

(NAPS)-When he was six years old, Francisco lost his voice and mobility to meningitis. For the next six years, he had communicated with his parents, brother and sister solely with eye gaze. Francisco's family would ask him yes-or-no questions and he would answer "yes" by looking up at the ceiling, or "no" by looking straight ahead.

Recently, members of the Shriners Car Club in Seattle donated a portable computer to Francisco. With the support of the Portland Shriners Hospital for Children, he is learning to use the computer to speak the words his mind is thinking.

During therapy sessions at the hospital, Francisco reclines in his wheelchair, looking at the computer on a table in front of him. His hands

The computer displays four fast-food outlet names and logos. Starting with Pizza Hut, the logos darken for five-second intervals. When the computer highlights the McDonald's logo, Francisco twitches his left foot to select it. Click. Then a McDonald's menu pops up on the screen. Small boxes on the screen display pictures and names of menu items, such as cheeseburger, apple pie, Coke and French fries. Other buttons display the words, "I want," "Please," and "Help me."

Speech therapist Mira Shah asks Francisco, "Do you want something to eat or something to drink?"

Francisco sets the computer program in motion by tapping the button with his foot. The computer highlights words on the menu and says, in Spanish, "I want something to eat." The computer speaks in a deep male voice, which makes Francisco smile. His mother, who sits nearby, smiles with him.

Francisco is happy when he is in therapy with Mira, says his mother, Hermelinda. Before he came to Shriners, Francisco did not have a computer or a wheelchair. "We were always carrying him in our arms," said Hermelinda in Spanish.

Francisco is one of many Shriners patients who use computers to help them communicate as well as play. Children who can't hold a paintbrush or a doll can touch a computer screen to create works of art, or play with "virtual" Barbie dolls.

Shriners Hospital for Children is made up of 22 technologically advanced hospitals, delivering family-centered care and specializing in orthopaedic problems, severe burns or spinal cord injury rehabilitation. Boosting KCHIP enrollment should be high priority Finding ways to keep children healthy should be one of Kentucky's top goals. So when the Kentucky Children's Health Insurance Program was introduced to cover the health care needs of children whose families make too much to receive Medicaid, but not enough to pay for medical care, it was rightly seen as a blessing.

There was only one problem. Unlike the saying in the movie "Field of Dreams," just because you build it does not mean people will come.

Although an estimated 78,000 children are eligible for KCHIP, in January 1999 only 5,500 had been signed up. The program began with money appropriated by Congress in 1997.

Fortunately, hard work to get the word to eligible families is producing positive results.

An advertising blitz on television, radio and buses, along with a shoe leather campaign by health department workers and help from school teachers to spread the word has resulted in 55,000 children now enrolled in the KCHIP program.

While a 70 percent participation rate is a vast improvement, the state still has far to go to consider the effort a success. Leaving 23,000 children without health insurance is not the level of "success" we should accept.

How to increase the numbers further is a frustrating problem. For parents who make sure their children have access to medical care, it seems unfathomable that parents without the means to do so would bypass an opportunity for free coverage. But until we understand the reasons behind that reluctance, it will be difficult to reverse.

One reason is that some people are too proud to accept free assistance, or are embarrassed to ask for it. Another is that the enrollment process in the past could be intimidating for people not used to dealing with government agencies.

The enrollment form was once 12 pages, but it has been simplified to two, said Doris Goldstein, supervisor of eligibility and outreach for KCHIP. It also can be taken home to be completed, which eliminates some parents' reluctance to come to a county office and be seen applying for assistance.

Making sure children have health concerns addressed early on will alleviate lingering problems later, which become more expensive to correct. It keeps children in school and better able to concentrate and learn.

Continuing to search for ways to increase the number of children enrolled has to remain a high priority for Kentucky, if we want to start improving our woeful health status.

Letters to the Editor

Residents want attention to road

Editor:

We the people on Simpson Branch of Drift want to ask the Floyd County Fiscal Court why they leave our road out, when we are taxpaying, good people, some retired, some widowed, some just trying to raise their families.

When we see all the other roads in the Floyd County Times that are getting blacktop, it makes us wonder why we can't get our road fixed or blacktopped, though we are glad our neighbors are getting the help they need for their roads.

We have given the court a petition with more than 100 signatures on it, stating how critical our road is. I, Clinis Hall, do think it is a personal thing against me for not voting the way I was told to. So, if I'm right, please don't make our citizens of Simpson Branch suffer because of this.

I feel that every citizen of Floyd County deserves to be treated equally, and we feel as though we have been forgotten. We want to invite every citizen of Floyd County to visit our hollow and meet some of us and observe this road, and we're sure they will understand why we are so upset.

It has been said that Coal Mac left money to the fiscal court to re-blacktop this road when they left. They have been gone for quite some time and we have not seen any progress on our road, so if this rumor is true, where's the money?

We want to ask Paul Hunt Thompson, county judge-executive, and all the commissioners to please consider our road to be blacktopped, or at least let us know why they won't.

Thank you for taking the time to acknowledge this problem.

More free-speech Internet issues

The Internet may be creating new economic opportunity, but it's also creating some fascinating legal headaches. Consider these two examples:

- Neo-Nazi groups in Germany are getting around their country's tough restrictions on racist and violent speech by basing their Web sites on access providers in the United States and other countries. About 90 such groups have placed their hate-filled content on U.S.-based sites so far. Neo-Nazi groups are also placing their paeans to Hitler on sites based in a variety of European countries; in the Netherlands, some 350 such sites have been registered. The German government has no legal leverage to shut down the sites.

- In France, a judge ordered Yahoo Inc., the Internet services company based in Santa Clara, Calif., to stop providing Nazi artifacts on its English-language auction site. Putting such items up for auction, the judge declared, is "an offense against the collective memory" of France, which was occupied by Germany during World War II. Yahoo, which does not place Nazi memorabilia for sale on its France-based subsidiary, is challenging the ruling. The judge has the option to impose steep fines if Yahoo does not submit to his ruling.

The cases reveal the lack of consensus over whether governments can apply national laws to regulating the Internet. The German government, which recently began a crackdown on far-right groups in the wake of violent incidents, has chosen not to try to apply its strict speech regulations to Internet content based outside its borders. The French government, on the other hand, takes the opposite view. French authorities appear determined to enforce their national laws regardless of whether they wind up trampling on free-speech rights that, in the United States, receive firm protection under the Constitution.

It's far from clear whether this friction between the wide-open nature of the Internet and the restrictive laws of individual governments can be resolved. Several possibilities deserve mention.

In the Netherlands, an activist group employs a clever short-term strategy to reduce the breathing room for neo-Nazi sites. The group registers as many Web site names with neo-Nazi references as possible — names relating to concentration camps, the phrase "Heil Hitler" and other familiar references — and then holds onto the names without placing any content on the sites. Thus is cyber squatting being employed to fight back against apologists for Hitler.

That is only a short-term solution, of course. Some experts say the best overall remedy is technological, by developing filters to screen out content in specific countries. Others say the ultimate solution has to be in creating an international body to hammer out international standards.

One thing's for sure. The legal headaches will continue as long as the Internet remains decisively influenced by Americans, whose notion of freedom is thankfully far broader than that seen in most of the rest of the world.

Unusual requests

We get some rather interesting request here at the paper.

One day this young man parked in the Times parking lot and went on to court (let me say up front that we frown on such practice) and left his lights on. Not having a Die Hard battery, he didn't have enough juice to start the car. He asked me to boost him. I told him I would take a little keen switch and run him to Wheelwright. "Huh?" he asked. I told him it was a joke.

Anyway while we were getting the car started, he informed me that he got the car for $5 in one of those sales at Pikeville. I always thought that was just a ploy to get customers in, but he affirmed that he got the vehicle for just $5. I told him if he came to Prestonsburg and made it back home one time, he had made a bargain. He assured me he had made many such trips. Best bargain I have heard about in a long time.

One Saturday, a lady who lives close to the Times building called and said she didn't get her Friday paper. I told her that chivalry was not dead and I would hand carry it to her. "Come on," she said. I took it to her and now she thinks I'm a prince.

Of course we get calls all the time asking that a lawsuit or divorces not be put in the paper. I can tell you now that such a request will not be honored. If the paper honored those requests, there would be none to report. Anyway if you have been sued or your marriage has broken up, deal with it. Nearly everyone who cares one way or the other already knows.

Recently a nice young lady popped into the office on a Saturday afternoon and asked if anyone could tie a knot. I thought they were having a hanging down at the Justice Center and grabbed for my camera — sure that I was going to get the biggest scoop of my career (and the only one, many of you will be quick to point out).

Such was not the case. She simply wanted someone to tie a young man's tie (we assumed it was her son) since he was due at a wedding shortly.

By acclamation, Ralph Davis was selected to do the job. After the mother and her son left, we kidded around with some headlines about the event. "Editor chokes groom with his own tie," Davis said that one would not fly as he was sure the young man was not the prospective groom. So we tried again "Choking back journalistic decorum, editor does young churchgoer a favor."

OK, so they are not that funny. It can be hard to be funny on Saturday afternoon after a full week of finding and reporting the news so we take what chances we get for a little levity and other fancy words that tend to make us sound more intelligent than we really are. The crew is yelling — hey, speak for yourself.

When something goes wrong this week, which it will unless you live on Upper Utopia, have a little fun with it. It's easier to laugh than cry and a whole lot better for your health.

President Clinton's call to service on millions of cereal boxes

AmeriCorps hopes to recruit 50,000 new members this year, more than the U.S. Marine Corps, and it hopes this first-of-its-kind cereal box campaign-by reaching millions of Americans-will help it reach that goal.

The John F. Kennedy legacy includes the Peace Corps, and President Clinton's legacy includes an AmeriCorps flush with members, bipartisan support and funding.

"Wherever I go, I try to talk to young people about AmeriCorps, to encourage them to serve. Now millions of Americans will receive the call to service from the breakfast table," President Clinton said of the program.

Sunrise Organic cereal will feature three AmeriCorps members on the back panel of the box as a part of its "Planet Partners" program to raise up to $100,000 to promote a healthy planet. Each box of Sunrise contains a code number for consumers to punch in at the www.sunrisecereal.com Web site. For every code number entered, Sunrise Organic cereal will donate one dollar to AmeriCorps programs. On the Web site consumers help Sunrise Organic determine where the money will go-either to support organic farming or preserve national parks.

The box also will provide information to people interested in joining AmeriCorps, and the Web site will feature monthly updates and photographs from the three selected volunteers describing their adventures as AmeriCorps members and progress reports on their current projects.

The three AmeriCorps volunteers selected for the cereal box are: John Kearney, 26, of Ketchum, Idaho, and a University of Vermont graduate, who serves with the Montana Conservation Corps, where his work includes restoring habitat in Yellowstone National Park;

Molly O'Neill, 25, of Muncie, Ind., and a Ball State University graduate, who serves with the Maine Conservation Corps, where her projects include preserving sections of the Appalachian Trail and ocean shoreline in Acadia National Park;

Julie Schrader, 24, of Madison, Wis., and a University of Wisconsin graduate, who serves with Austin Community Gardens in Austin, Texas, where she teaches organic gardening to children and grows organic vegetables for food banks and homeless shelters.

AmeriCorps is only five years old and is not yet a widely recognized program. AmeriCorps is gearing up to recruit 50,000 members next year-its largest class ever. President Clinton has proposed that by the year 2004, there should be 100,000 new AmeriCorps members each year, more than double current numbers. The lack of name recognition is a handicap to meeting annual recruiting goals, but the cereal box campaign will change that.

"Our goal is to be as recognizable as the Peace Corps," said Harris Wofford, former U.S. Senator from Pennsylvania and current CEO of the Corporation for National Service, which oversees AmeriCorps. "This program with Sunrise Organic breakfast cereal reaches more people than we've ever been able to reach in the past. You could say we were looking for something to give our recruiting more bite."

Wofford worked with President John F. Kennedy in 1961 to create the Peace Corps. Now, embracing the vision for national service held by Kennedy, George Bush and Bill Clinton, Wofford is known as an untiring advocate of AmeriCorps who helped make the vision a reality.

More than 150,000 young people have served in AmeriCorps since it was launched in 1994.

Web site promotion to raise money to preserve national parks is featured on box.

Members typically serve for a year and can choose where and how they serve. They receive a modest living allowance, health insurance, student loan deferment and training. Upon completion of their service they receive a $4,725 education award to help pay for college, graduate school, vocational training or to pay off student loans.

Included among the 1,000 programs offered, AmeriCorps members can preserve national parks, protect the environment, teach organic farming, spearhead disaster relief, fight forest fires, build homes, and tutor, mentor and help vaccinate children.

"We were very interested in working with AmeriCorps because the values held by Sunrise Organic breakfast cereal match the values of AmeriCorps and its members: civic responsibility, protecting the environment, and building strong communities through service," said Sunrise Organic spokesperson Tom Johnson.

Sunrise Organic breakfast cereal was created in 1998. An organic cereal that tastes great and is value priced, Sunrise Organic has quickly become the top-selling organic cereal in the nation. Sunrise is a corn and whole-grain wheat cereal sweetened with honey and made entirely from organic ingredients.

You don't always reap what you sew

by ROBERT E. SWIFT

(NAPS)-There is an enormous amount of frustration in the manufacturing sector of the United States economy. The workers are doing everything right-this is the most productive era in our economic history, quality is way up, and there seems to be a healthy balance of power between management and labor. And yet these workers are afraid they'll lose their jobs to unseen forces any day now.

Globalization for this group of people has been an unmitigated disaster that has disrupted their way of life. Headlines such as "NAFTA Partners Help U.S. Imports Rise 14.7 percent," or Africa-CBI Bill Sails Through Congress," and "China Entry Into World Trade Organization" foretell further erosion of jobs in the sector.

And in fact the following headline, found in a recent issue of Women's Wear Daily, describes where these jobs are going. "Cambodians Decry Factory Conditions," is a report on a labor action in Cambodia mounted by factory workers from that country's garment district. The group marched through Cambodia's capital to protest working conditions and pay scale and forced overtime.

In December 1999, our government increased Cambodia's quota by 5 percent-even as the Administration denounced the labor conditions in the country's factories.

Cambodia's factories produce garments that are sent to the United States and soon take their place among the shelves of department stores and boutiques across the country. Other Third World countries such as China, Mexico, Honduras, Indonesia, several sub-Saharan African countries and the Caribbean also compete for our market and offer U.S.-based manufacturers the bottom-line benefits of cheap labor.

But this labor doesn't really want to be cheap. As the protests indicate, they want to be able to afford a better way of life and be paid a fair wage, and not be the commodity they now are. And on these shores, our workers simply wish to keep their jobs, and not have to sacrifice them to the underpaid of the Third World.

The tens of thousands of jobs lost to this transfer-the U.S. lost 15,000 manufacturing jobs between January and March 2000 alone-also signal an enormous trade imbalance. Through the first quarter of this year our trade imbalance on goods has shot up 43 percent, to 41.6.6 billion. China and Mexico alone account for more than 20 percent of that total, both countries having targeted America as a ripe market for price exploitation.

Policies such as the North American Free Trade Agreement and international bodies such as the World Trade Organization, while well intentioned, favor third World countries at the expense of U.S. job holders.

Economists have taken note of the building crisis in trade imbalances and see this as a fundamental weakness in our economy. Further, the human toll is considerable, and can be cited as a direct consequence of our trade policies. For example, NAFTA was passed in November 1993, taking effect January 1994. From December of that year until March 2000, 320,000 jobs were lost in the apparel industry and 132,000 in textiles, for a total of 452,000 lost jobs in, ironically, an otherwise growing industry.

Cambodia, China, Mexico and other Third World countries should not have unfettered access to American jobs. To support our home textile and apparel industry, look for the Made in U.S.A. label, and keep the jobs where they'll strengthen our economy.

For facts on helping our economy by buying items made in America, write to the Crafted With Pride in the U.S.A. Council at 1045 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10018; or call at 212-819-4397 or fax 212-819-4493.

Diabetes reaches epidemic proportions

(NAPS) — The statistics are staggering. Diabetes is the number one health problem facing Hispanic-Americans in the United States. In fact, they are twice as likely as Caucasians to die from the disease and complications stemming from it.

Equally as concerning, one in four African-American women, over the age of 55 are estimated to have the disease. Both Hispanic and African-Americans are nearly twice as likely to develop type 2 or adult-onset diabetes. Type 2 diabetes is the most common form of the disease, where the body becomes insensitive to insulin and can no longer properly use it.

Although diabetes is a chronic disease without a cure, it can be controlled through diet, exercise, and sometimes medication. The greatest risk factors contributing to this growing epidemic are obesity and lack of regular exercise. But, obesity isn't the only factor that affects diabetics differently than the general population. Diabetics often have a higher incidence of urinary tract infections (UTI).

The good news is diabetics can take precautions to maintain a healthy urinary tract, and Ocean Spray is the brand scientifically proven to help. Medical research confirms what has been nutrition folklore. According to a 1994 university study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, elderly women who drank 10 ounces of Ocean Spray® Lightstyle low-calorie cranberry juice cocktail a day had a reduced chance for developing UTIs.

Lightstyle contains just 40 calories and only 10 grams of carbohydrates per 8-ounce serving, yet it's packed with 130 percent of the Recommended Dietary Allowance (RDA) of vitamin C. One 8-ounce serving equals 1/2 fruit exchange. Appropriate for diabetics, Lightstyle juice drinks are sweetened with Splenda® Brand Sweetener, the only low-calorie sweetener made from sugar.

Cranberry juices and juice drinks contain proanthocyanidins, more commonly known as condensed tannins. These natural compounds found in cranberries have been shown to inhibit the attachment of harmful bacteria in the urinary tract. Interestingly, the same anti-adhesion properties responsible for urinary tract health may help inhibit the activity of other disease-causing bacteria, including some bacteria that contribute to gum disease.

For more information on diabetes and/or Lightstyle juice drinks or to order free brochures on the two subjects, call the Ocean Spray Consumer Helpline at 1-800-662-3263 or visit their Web site at www.oceanspray.com.

Ocean Spray is an agricultural cooperative owned by 750 cranberry growers and 150 citrus growers throughout the United States and Canada. Headquartered in Lakeville-Middleboro, Mass., Ocean Spray ranks among the top 50 food and beverage companies and is the best-selling brand name in the canned and bottle-juice category. For additional information about Ocean Spray Cranberries, Inc., visit their Web site at www.oceanspray.com.

Study offers hope to those suffering from chronic major depression

Study Results

- Study involved 681 patients
- Response Rates
 - Combination of Serzone and psychotherapy 85%
 - Treated with Serzone alone 55%
 - Treated with psychotherapy alone 52%

(NAPS) — We all feel depressed at some point in our lives, troubled with symptoms such as persistent sadness, feelings of hopelessness or worthlessness, sleep disturbances, fatigue, change in appetite, or loss of interest in ordinary activities. If your symptoms persist for two years or more, you may be suffering from chronic major depression. Chronic major depression is a serious form of depression affecting 14 million Americans.

Until now, those suffering from this disorder were often thought to respond poorly to treatment. However, a study recently published in The New England Journal of Medicine, offers hope for the millions suffering from this debilitating disorder.

In this study, a combination therapy of the antidepressant Serzone® (nefazodone HCl), and psychotherapy designed specifically for chronic major depression provided the best results. In fact, patients in the study, all of whom had chronic major depression, had an unprecedented 85 percent response rate to this combination therapy. This is the highest response rate ever seen in the treatment of depression for a three-month period. The use of Serzone alone led to a 55 percent response rate, while the use of psychotherapy alone led to a 52 percent response rate.

"This is the first time that combination therapy has proven to be so much more effective than either medication or psychotherapy alone," said lead investigator Martin B. Keller, M.D., Chairman, Brown University Mood Disorders Program, Butler Hospital, Providence, Rhode Island. "The findings offer hope for the vast number of patients suffering from chronic forms of major depression, who are often considered poorly responsive to treatment."

The study shows that these individuals are not resistant to medication and psychotherapy."

In the study, Serzone, alone or in combination therapy, was associated with improvements in patients' symptoms of depression much sooner than psychotherapy. In addition, Serzone was well-tolerated and associated with minimal sexual dysfunction and no significant weight gain. These are common side effects associated with some other antidepressants. Compared to psychotherapy, Serzone was also shown to provide significant improvement in insomnia, which is common in patients who have depression and chronic depression.

More than 46 million Americans, ages 15-54, suffer from depressive episodes annually. Depression costs the United States economy an estimated $53 billion each year.

If you or someone you know suffers from chronic major depression, talk to your doctor about what treatment options are available.

Serzone coadministered with Seldane (terfenadine), Hismanal (astemizole), Propulsid (cisapride), or Orap (pimozide) is contraindicated. Coadministration with monoamine oxidase inhibitors is not recommended. Coadministration with triazolam should be avoided in most patients, including the elderly. The most common adverse events associated with Serzone are: dry mouth, somnolence, nausea, dizziness, constipation, asthenia and lightheadedness.

For Serzone (nefazodone HCl) full prescribing information, please contact Lanic Shapero of Bristol-Myers Squibb Public Affairs at 609-252-5931.

Need car care? Here's advice

(NUE) — Today's complex cars and hectic family schedules leave most people with neither the time nor inclination for much in the way of backyard car repairs. So finding a good automotive repair facility is an important step in protecting your automotive investment.

The National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence (ASE), a nonprofit organization that tests and certifies the competence of individual automotive repair technicians, offers the following tips on choosing a repair facility.

- Look for a repair business before you need one; you can make better decisions when you are not rushed.
- Ask friends and associates for their recommendations.
- Consult local consumer organizations about the reputation of the shop; inquire about the number, nature and resolution of complaints.
- Do not choose a shop based only on a convenient location.
- You probably won't find hospital-clean conditions, but look for a tidy, well-organized facility, with vehicles in the parking lot equal in value to your own and modern equipment in the service bays.
- Ask if the shop usually handles your vehicle make and model or type of repair. Some facilities specialize.
- Look for signs of technician competence. The customer area should display trade school diplomas, certificates of advanced course work and ASE certifications — a national standard of technician competence.

- Look for community service awards, too: plaques for civic involvement, customer service awards, membership in the Better Business Bureau and other consumer groups.
- Professionally run establishments will have a courteous, helpful staff. The manager, service writer or technician should be willing to answer your questions.
- Labor rates, fees for testing and diagnostic work, guarantees, methods of payment, etc. should be posted.
- Feel free to ask for the names of a few customers as references. Call them.
- Start with a minor job. Reward good service with repeat business and more complex work.

For a free brochure with tips on selecting a repair facility, send a self-addressed, stamped, business-sized envelope to: ASE Repair Shop Brochure, Dept. NU-007, 13505 Dulles Technology Drive, Suite 2, Herndon, VA 20171-3421.

The National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence was founded in 1972 as a nonprofit, independent organization dedicated to improving the quality of automotive service and repair through the voluntary testing and certification of automotive technicians.

ASE-certified technicians wear blue and white ASE shoulder insignia and carry credentials listing their exact area(s) of certification. Their employers often display the blue and white ASE sign.

Visit www.asecert.org for more information.

Commissioner selection to be announced, September 8

The Kentucky Board of Education will meet again on Friday, September 8, to continue its discussion of candidates for the position of commissioner of education.

The board met in special session on Tuesday, August 29, to interview three finalists and deliberate its selection.

"Selecting a commissioner may well be the most important decision we make as a board," said Helen Mountjoy, board chair. "We take our statutory responsibility in this regard far too seriously to rush it. Each of the candidates with whom we met today is outstanding. Each is still very much a contender for the position."

Clearly, it will not be an easy choice. Each finalist brings great strengths to the table."

The three finalists are:

- Sammie Campbell Parrish, dean of the School of Education at North Carolina Central University
- Stuart Silberman, superintendent of Daviess County schools
- Gene Wilhoit, deputy commissioner of the Department of Education's Bureau of Learning Support Services

The board announced that it will meet on September 8 to discuss the candidate's qualifications further. They plan to make their selection on that date.

Pikeville College Bears open with JV Tigers

by STEVE LeMASTER
 SPORTS WRITER

What was once just a dream of so many has now become a great reality. So many people throughout eastern Kentucky and around Pike County dreamed of having a college football program to call their own. Fortunately for so many, that dream is now a reality. The Pikeville College football team will play its inaugural 2000 college football season as a junior varsity club team. The football Bears travel to Georgetown Thursday night to battle the Georgetown College JV team. The residents of Pikeville, Pike County and other surrounding counties are overjoyed knowing that college football has finally become a reality for the people of Appalachia and eastern Kentucky. Pikeville College head coach Zak Willis will be guiding the new Pikeville College football program. Willis was chosen from a list of candidates to come in and get the program started. The South Carolina native comes to Pikeville College from the University of South Carolina football program, where he worked under the legendary Lou Holtz. Shortly after assuming the task of heading the new Pikeville College football program, Willis received a letter from Holtz congratulating him on landing the Pikeville coaching job. In the letter Holtz commended Willis on the job he had done at South Carolina, and wished him well at Pikeville. Willis hopes to now carry some of Holtz's teachings with him on the field at Pikeville College. "Coach Holtz is a very caring but yet demanding person," said Willis. "Coach Holtz expects a lot of the people he works with, and in return he gives everything he's got to the job he does." When the Bears step out on the field at Rawlings Stadium in Georgetown on Thursday, Willis will bring with him a little part of Lou Holtz. The Pikeville College football team

The Pikeville College coaching staff and athletic trainers are hoping to get the season off to a successful start at Georgetown Thursday night.

Bryant's 4 TDs lead South Floyd in 54-0 romp

Raiders' defense slows Collins, Keathley

by ED TAYLOR
 SPORTS EDITOR

For the second consecutive weekend the Betsy Layne Bobcats found it hard to generate any kind of offense on the football field as high school football entered its third week.

Betsy Layne gained a meager 69 yards on the ground, failing to get on the scoreboard in a 54-0 setback to South Floyd on the road.

Bobcat quarterback Brandt Brooks completed seven of 16 passes, but the completions were only good for 57 yards through the air.

South Floyd, which did not play well in its opening game and took the previous weekend off, had a chance to hand new head coach Nathan Jones his first high school victory. He also felt the dash of cold water over his back as well.

B.J. Bryant has just picked up from last year and ran his way through and around the Betsy Lane line in scoring four touchdowns and converting three two-point conversions to lead the Raider offense. Bryant carried the football 11 times for 146 yards rushing.

It was a special night for Ryan Hall, a defensive and offensive lineman as he got to line up in the backfield and run a conversion play.

Nothing seemed to go well for either team in the first period as both teams struggled on the gridiron to get any gain on the ground or by air.

It was a scoreless game after the first 12 minutes of play. Many of the Raider faithful had to scratch their heads in wonderment as to why the Raiders were passing the football instead of running at the Bobcats.

With the football when the first quarter ended, the Raiders struck pay dirt early in the second period when Josh Johnson hit P.J. Cox on a 29-yard pass play that gave the Raiders a 6-0 lead.

A Betsy Layne turnover set up the second South Floyd score when Brooks was scrambling to avoid a Raider blitz. In eluding the defense, he fumbled the football with the Raiders coming up with the loose ball. Three plays later, Bryant scampered in from 25-yards out and added the two-point conversion for a 14-0 game.

Betsy Layne tried to open some holes for its feature back, Adam Collins, but passage just wasn't there as the huge front line of the Raiders held on four downs.

The Raiders made it a 22-0 game on Bryant's second touchdown of the game, a 4-yard run and second conversion.

South Floyd took a 30-0 lead to the locker area at the half. The final touchdown LEADING ONTO THE FIELD and on the field was running back B.J. Bryant (2) as he rushed for 146 yards and scored four touchdowns in his team's 54-0 win over Betsy Layne.

for the Raiders came when Betsy Layne fumbled the ball away on the ensuing kickoff. Bryant scored easily on a 35-yard run and Matt Tackett added the two-point conversion.

Betsy Layne Coach Ted George appeared to have abandoned the running game and tried going over the Raider defense. Brock Keathley made a great catch for a 15-yard gain but he was later hurt and had to leave the game.

Betsy Layne had its best drive of the game on its first possession in the second half. But the drive ended on the Raider 40-yard line. On a blocked punt attempt, the Raiders had excellent field position and added eight more points on a 25-yard scoring run by Joe Platkus. Bryant added the conversion and it was 38-0.

A Look at Sports...

Blanton getting old, so he says

■ BACK AGAIN...
 Vacation time! You have to love it. I enjoyed a week off and also the holiday. Got to visit my family at our annual reunion and we had a great time. But for me, it is always good to be back at the computer and turning out the stories. When I travel, I like to get other papers and see what they are doing with their sports. Even some "dailies," I don't think, has as nice of a section as we do.

■ BLANTON
 A very good friend of mine, and he has been for a long time, Jason Blanton, is completing 18 years of covering sports around Kentucky. Now Jason is going to turn "35" after the turn of a new year and he is already saying one more year is enough of writing sports. Well, knowing Jason as I do, he will give it up when he draws his first social security check. I told him he had another 31 years to go yet. He could always write an column on all the rule changes he has seen when he writes his last column at the age of 65. Jason has been a big help to this reporter over the years. Jason has been a reporter for the Ashland Independent for the past 18 years. Besides writing for that paper as well as ours, he also has articles published in Cats Pause and the KHSAA magazine. He deals some articles for ihigh.com, a web site where you can get scores. Jason is behind the mike broadcasting Pikeville College basketball as well as football and basketball for Morehead State University, something he has done for the past 13 years. "This year I want to be the man on the field with the mike," said Jason as he prepares for his first game this weekend.

Jason works hard at his profession and as head of the Resource Center at Warfield school. But he had been battling a bigger war and seems to have come out the winner.

"I've went from 307 pounds down to 235," he reported with a happy sound in his voice. "I want to lose about another 20 pounds. It has been a lot of hard work."

I am proud of the accomplishments of my good friend and wish him the best in dropping the extra 20 and hope he can keep it off.

■ JORDAN SETS RECORD EVEN STRAIGHTER

Paul Jordan, a long time friend, still contends that he is the journalist who tagged Kelly Coleman with the name "King" Kelly. Paul sent along a copy of the article that he wrote February 25, 1956 with the headline, "King Kelly (Not Coal)

(See SPORTS, page two)

Sports

Reigns at Wayland."

I consider both Paul and Kelly good friends. I really don't know who gave Kelly the name but Paul has always been honest with me in the past. His article seems to indicate that he, in fact, did tag Kelly with the name.

I am not going to get in the middle of this because I really appreciate both men, their accomplishments, and their contribution to the field of athletics.

I will just let you, the readers, decide who really gave the name "King" Kelly to the basketball great.

FOOTBALL, HIGH SCHOOL STYLE

It certainly has not been a good three weeks of football for county teams. Between the four schools, there are four wins and seven losses among them: Allen Central (1-2), Betsy Layne (1-2), Prestonsburg (1-2) and South Floyd (1-1).

All four schools are going to be hard pressed to make the playoffs, although Allen Central is not competing in the district this season.

Prestonsburg and South Floyd have a shot at being a fourth seed in their respective districts. Pikeville, Hazard, and Paintsville appear to be the top three teams in Class A, Region IV, District 2. The fourth slot will go to either South Floyd or Fleming-Neon. Elkhorn appears to be down this season as well as Phelps.

Prestonsburg will have to look at a Belfry, Breathitt County, and could very well be a three seed. But we have a long ways to go yet and seven weeks remain in the season.

UK LOST ANOTHER ONE... OR DID THEY

If the University of Kentucky does not suspend Jule Cammara for his DUI over the weekend, then they need to apologize to Desmond Allison. I know the violation of Allison was more serious but the fact the school has a strict law against DUI's should not keep coach Tubby Smith from suspending the Wildcat.

Kentucky basketball has gone down since Tubby became the head coach. No top recruits, role players only. In trouble with the law and breaking of team rules. It is too bad that our program at the state university has come to this.

Until Friday, good sports everyone and be good sports!

Rain delays 201 racing action a week

by CHRIS BELCHER
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

This past weekend's two-day show at Sitka's 201 Speedway ended up being a Friday night of qualifying with heat races in all five divisions determining the starting grids for the following evening. However, shortly after the gates opened on Saturday night, the rains came in full force, completely drowning any hopes of getting racing under the green flag, even though the rains finally did stop.

Saturday night's features will line up like this: Late models will have the #13X of Paris, Tenn.'s Marty Allison on the front row, with Allen's Brandon Kinzer. Jim LeMaster and points leader

Michael Paul Howard will start on the front row of the super bomber feature. Saturday night's bomber feature will pit first and second place points contenders, with new points leader West Liberty's Keith Potter and Melvin's Jody Puckett starting on the front row. Road hogs will line up with the #11X of Scott Pennington #H2 with Walter Castle aboard. Big prizes boost Reno's Charity Classic golf event

A new Buick LeSabre and $20,000 cash lead an impressive list of prizes pledged for Reno's Charity Classic golf scramble. The event, benefitting the United Way of Eastern Kentucky, is scheduled for September 12 at the Paintsville Country Club.

Terry Fitzer, president and CEO of Reno's Roadhouse Inc., said, "This area has been very supportive of our Prestonsburg restaurant and we're happy to have the opportunity to do this. Most of the business people we've talked to about getting involved and helping us have been great. It looks like we're going to have fun and raise a lot of money for the local organizations that depend on the United Way for funding."

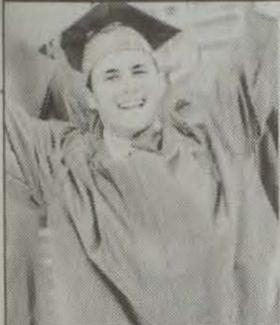

The new Buick, sponsored by Fletcher & Hall's in Pikeville, and the cash prize, sponsored by MetLife Financial Services agent Sandy Honeycutt, are the two biggest hole-in-one prizes but others, including complete sets of Alien DS-9 Golf Clubs and a golf vacation at a Reno, Nev., resort, ensure excitement at every par 3 hole. Prizes will also be awarded to the top three teams and for the longest drive, longest putt and closest to pin. All participants will be treated to refreshments throughout the day and a cookout catered by Reno's Roadhouse.

The United Way of Eastern Kentucky provides financial support to 16 local non-profit agencies providing services to Pike, Floyd, Johnson, Martin and Magoffin counties.

Pamela Compton, executive director, said "We are so appreciative of all the work the Reno's staff is doing for us in organizing and sponsoring this event. The businesses and individuals who support it will actually be helping 16 charities right here in our own communities. All the money raised here will stay here in these five counties as opposed to being sent to Louisville and then doled out as they see fit."

For more information on sponsoring a hole or participating in the Reno's Charity Classic, call Connie Reed at 886-0111, ext. 10.

PAINTING TIPS

While some people prefer oil-based (alkyd) paint for interior applications for durability and washability, water-based latex (latex acrylic) is generally more popular, because it is easier to apply, dries faster, and cleans up with soap and water. In any case, with paint, you generally get what you pay for. The more expensive paints have titanium (for durability) and more color pigments (for better quality). Less expensive paints have more filler, such as chalk, and will not cover as well or last as long. The average paint job will last about six years, but top-of-the-line paint, are likely to last a good deal longer. And, there is no point in purchasing top-quality paint, if you are going to skimp on tools.

Do-it-yourselfers and professional contractors know that at HINDMAN PROMART they will find most everything they need for all types of painting and finishing projects. Located at #1 Pro St., Hindman (785-3151), our staff is very well versed about materials and tools for most every home improvement project, so if you have a particular question, don't hesitate to ask. Open: Mon.-Fri., 7-5:30; Sat., 7-2. Need a special tool or piece of equipment for a one-time project? Visit our extensive rental department.

HINT: For the best results, use woven synthetic (nylon) roller covers, rather than the disposable type, to roll paint onto interior walls.

Parasailing an Exciting Way to See Sights

By LINDA GETTMANN

You're sure I won't get wet?" I ask Lance Crawley, the hook-up man on our parasail boat.

"Not if you don't want to," he says. "We can just dip your toes in."

"No thanks, Lance, my toes are fine," I assure him.

I'm about to be lifted 350 feet in the air over the U.S. Virgin Islands, harnessed into a huge yellow parachute that is connected to a tow line controlled by an electric winch on the back deck of a sleek 31-foot speedboat, powered by a 320-horsepower inboard engine.

Lance issues instructions as I step into the harness and he fastens the straps securely to the chute.

"Just sit down here on the platform with your knees up," he says. "The tow line is reeled out as the boat accelerates and you gain altitude."

"You're sure I won't get wet?" I ask again nervously, since I'm fully clothed and have my Nikon camera slung around my neck.

"No, we'll keep you dry," laughs Ricky Shepanski, the boat driver, as he pushes forward on the throttle. Suddenly I'm flying. I can't help but squeal and laugh as the parachute effortlessly lifts me higher and higher over the sparkling blue Caribbean water of St. Thomas.

Parasailing has been around for years now. You may have watched it on TV or at the beach and secretly wished you could try it. Now you don't even get wet (if you don't want to), and the harness and towing apparatus are very safe. No more running on a beach to inflate the chute. No more crash landings in the water or on the beach.

Safety is first and foremost on the minds of Caribbean Parasail personnel at the Renaissance Grand Beach Resort. Ricky and Lance take good care of our group of first-time fliers in the U.S. Coast Guard-approved boat. Trained crews help vacationers from 8 to 80 years old experience a bird's-eye view of St. Thomas and St. John in an easy ride that combines elements of hot air ballooning, hang gliding and parachuting.

I'm gliding along smoothly behind the miniature speedboat below. What a great view! I let go with one hand to take some photos of St. John and the east end of St. Thomas. Below me personal watercraft are zipping back and forth, leaving streaks of white spray, as the ferry between Red Hook and St. John makes a

FISHING FITNESS

Conditioning Is Becoming Part of Game

By TIM TUCKER, Outdoors Writer

As the competition has increased dramatically over the past decade, more and more of the nation's top tournament pros have begun to place a bigger premium on their physical conditioning.

Make no mistake about it, this has become a sport for athletes — well-conditioned athletes.

Former NFL defensive lineman Tim Goad, an aspiring tournament pro from North Carolina, discovered that fact the first time he participated as an amateur in a BASSMASTER Top 150 tournament.

"After the three practice days, I'm tired," Goad says. "Mental fatigue will hurt me more than anything. Pro fishermen definitely have to be in shape. They have to be very tough mentally."

"As far as physical demands, they're up early every morning and go to bed late. They stand up all day fishing and some don't even look tired. They look like they could do another 12 hours without any problem. They've got to be in great shape to do this. A lot of people don't think fishing is very strenuous, but if you stand up in the front of that boat and fish for eight hours, you will learn the truth. People think they do this for fun, but I've been around them enough to know that this is work. There is nothing easy about it."

Indeed. That is the reason that at any tournament site, you might find David Fritts running cross-country, Roland Martin cooking his own healthy meals or Paul Elias working out with barbells that travel with him.

It has all become part of the game.

"I've always felt that physical conditioning in fishing is largely ignored, yet it plays a major role in your ability to compete on this level," said Rick Clunn, 53, who keeps himself in peak condition. That is part of the reason that, remarkably, he has never missed a single tournament day in 27 years. "It is impossible to maintain your concentration if you are not in shape and your body is hurting. I try to optimize my level of concentration by staying in the best possible shape."

Clunn exercises regularly and practices the martial arts to improve his reflexes, quickness and concentration.

It takes top-notch conditioning to be able to crank a big deep diver all day in the summertime or flip a day's worth of shoreline bushes.

As he headed toward the age of 60, Roland Martin decided to get serious about his physical conditioning.

Two years later, he had lost 40 pounds and added considerable muscle tone to his body.

"My motivation?," he said. "Just feeling bad. Just had sore toes from the gout. My back was hurting from being so heavy. I couldn't stand up and fish like I should. Now I'm standing up fine, and I don't need to sit down. I feel real good."

"I think I've reversed the aging process a little bit."

Martin has put together a game plan for staying in shape while on the road, which can be a real challenge.

"It's a twofold deal," he explains. "I'm trying to stay low-fat. I eat a lot because I'm a big eater. I eat a lot of carbohydrates, but I do work out. The key to it is if you eat a lot of carbs, you have to work out a lot. So I get up in the morning and try to do 45 minutes of workout aerobically — like stairs, running a mile, sit-ups, push-ups. Even the morning of a tournament day, I get at least 30 minutes of exercise in."

"To eat right, I go to some effort. I carry a steamer with me. I steam a lot of vegetables. I also have a little George Foreman grill, which I use to cook a lot of wild game like turkey breast and deer and elk meat. And wild game is low-fat."

"I did a bunch of turkey this week. I marinate the turkey breast in fat-free dressing and grill them on that little grill. And I put a bunch of vegetables in the steamer. And a potato, too, to get a little starch. A lot of salad with fat-free dressing."

Martin credits his renewed interest in physical conditioning to reviving a tournament career that includes BASS records for victories (19) and Angler of the Year awards (nine). This past season, he enjoyed a solid year on both the BASSMASTER and FLW circuits. At 60, Martin still competes with the best of them.

Physical conditioning helps 60-year-old Roland Martin keep up with — and surpass — competitors half his age.

INSIDE THE PRO FISHING TOUR

Pros' First Step: Joining a Club

Almost every single successful tournament bass pro began his career in the same fashion — by joining a local bass club. And, today, most credit those formative years for being the foundation for their major-league careers.

The bass-club alumni include guys like Rick Clunn, Shaw Grigsby, Kevin VanDam, Tim Horton, Gary Klein, Aaron Martens, Jay Yelas and Davy Hite.

They all learned the ABCs of their livelihood in the low-pressure, fun tournaments of their club days.

"Most guys who are fishing nationally started in a club," said Mike Surman, a Florida pro and the FLW Tour's first winner. "Then they fished local team or draw tournaments, then moved onto the national circuit."

"Joining a bass club is a great way for guys who think that they want to go out and compete on a higher level to learn about tournament fishing and see if it's for them. It's a good way to learn if you have what it takes or if you even want to have what it takes."

Six-time BASS Masters Classic champion Bernie Schultz is a prime example. While studying fine arts at the University of Florida, Schultz was invited to join a bass club by one of his professors. That club (Bassmasters of Gator Country) has a storied history. Its members have included Grigsby, six-time Red Man All-American qualifier Gary Simpson and current BASSMASTER pros Tom Burke and Darrell Pons.

Schooled by such high-caliber club competition, Schultz went on to excel in local, regional and Red Man tournaments before joining the BASS scene in 1987.

"It was a very competitive club," Schultz said. "I fished with some really good people, people that were better than me, and that's a key in any sport — put yourself with knowledgeable people."

It was on the club level that BASS winner Peter Thliveros began dreaming of a career in fishing. As a teen-ager, Thliveros won his club's angler of the year honor and was awarded a free entry into a BASS tournament. He finished a remarkable fifth in that event.

"I knew I wanted to be a pro bass fisherman," Thliveros said. "I talked to my high school guidance counselors about it."

Kentucky pro Mark Menendez was introduced to a local bass club by an older neighbor. When Menendez was 14, he obtained an aluminum bass boat with a 40-horsepower outboard motor. Then he joined the Kentucky Lake Bass Club.

"You had to be 16 to get in," Menendez said. "I didn't lie about my age. I told them I had taken two boating safety courses, and I was very serious about bass fishing."

The club soon found out just how serious the youngster was. Four months after joining the club, Menendez won his first tournament.

FLW Sponsor Although the details are sketchy, Operation Bass officials recently announced that the Shop-Vac Corp. of wet/dry vacuum fame has agreed to extend its sponsorship to a multi-year agreement.

This year marked the first year of sponsorship of the FLW Tour, EverStart and Red Man tournament circuits. The length of the new deal was not released.

Tips From the Pros

PENNY BERRYMAN is one of the country's most decorated female tournament pros. She lives in Dardenele, Ark.

Bass Fishing's Common Mistake

"Probably the biggest difference I see between folks who are fishing for fun and folks who are fishing for a living is the total concentration in the searching process."

"Pros who fish for a living are mentally 100-percent prepared for that first strike, and are always paying very close attention when they do connect with that first bite. They know if they can get one bite, it will lead them straight to bite No. 2. The key is to concentrate intently enough not only to take advantage of each strike, but also to be able to instantly analyze each and every strike."

"For example, say you get a strike while you are reaching down to grab a bottle of Coke. Realize that when you got the strike, you weren't reeling, and you had stopped your lure. Or you turn your head to answer a question and a fish bites. When you change the rhythm of what you're doing and you get a strike, it's the change in the rhythm that caused the strike."

"A lot of time, people who are just fishing for fun don't really realize what just occurred."

GEAR AND GOODIES

Affordable Reel Is Loaded With Features

In the past five years, several tackle makers have introduced top-of-the-line spinning reels that cost $200, even $300. That's a sizable price tag for bass and other freshwater anglers.

Give Shakespeare credit. The South Carolina manufacturer recently introduced an affordable spinning reel whose construction and features are similar to those high-priced open-face reels at a fraction of the price. When the Catera starts showing up in stores this fall, it will carry a price tag between $30 and $40, depending on the retailer.

The Catera features a five-bearing design, large titanium line roller, smooth six-disc drag system (with stainless steel and oiled felt washers), machined aluminum spool, and choice of right- or left-hand retrieve.

Impressively, the Catera is available in either a front- or rear-drag system. That is a choice not usually found in one product line.

Four front-drag models and three rear-drag models are available, ranging from light-freshwater to medium-freshwater in size.

The Catera appears to be a versatile, high-quality spinning reel.

Joe Pa and Penn State finding 2000 season to be a tough one

by STEVE LeMASTER
SPORTS WRITER

When the subject of college football comes up, one coach's name and the name of one school will more than likely always find their way into the conversation.

Joe Paterno and Penn State University have formed a bond that seems to have stood the test of time.

The Nittany Lions knew opening up the 2000 season against Southern Cal wouldn't be any easy task by any means. The Nittany Lions came out flat in the USC game and failed to get anything going on either side of the ball.

OK, so they lost to a perennial

Pac-10 power. The Trojans are a good team, but coming out the next week and losing to the Toledo Rockets makes many a Nittany Lion booster take a second look at this season.

Joe Pa himself seemed less than enthusiastic after the Toledo game. A total of 166 yards offensive output against Toledo, preceded by a 162 yard effort against Southern Cal, has the elder statesman wondering how good his team actually is, and if they are any good at all.

"I think we need to take a realistic look at whether we are any good," the Penn State Coach said after the game.

Losing to a top-15 Southern Cal team, and then losing to an unranked MAC school definitely has the Penn State mentor wondering how the rest of the 2000 season against the likes of Ohio State and Michigan will play out. The compound problems of not being able to throw or catch has all of Happy Valley in a frenzy.

Isn't college football great?

Fork Union College team should be loaded

A game I'm looking really forward to — the Pikeville College-Fork Union Military Academy football game.

The game was added last week along with a game against Mt. St. Joe's, a college out of Cincinnati. The Fork Union game will be played Saturday, September 30, at Pikeville's W.C. Hambley Athletic Complex.

If tradition is any indication, the Fork Union squad should pose a very formidable challenge for the Bears. Fork Union has a great tradition of producing top notch students and top notch athletes. The military academy has a long list of alumni who have gone on to great collegiate careers.

Bringing a military academy in for a game is a great idea. The two additional games brought the Pikeville College schedule up to an eight-game season.

The Saturday game against Fork Union is scheduled for a 1:30 p.m. kickoff. A college football game on a Saturday, right here close to home. I could not ask for more.

Open dates always good for high school gridiron squads

An open week for a high school football team is usually a good thing. Allowing extra time for injuries to heal is always good.

South Floyd had an open week to prepare for the Betsy Layne game this past Friday. The Raiders then came out and walloped the Bobcats 54-0.

An extra week of practice before a game can allow a team to change a considerable amount of its offensive or defensive game. Open dates are most often timely, but can sometimes sink a team into an even deeper hole than they are already in. I guess, it's just what a team makes of it.

My high school alma mater heads to Lexington this Friday

To say this Friday's football game is a big game for Johnson Central High School would be a big understatement.

No, it's not a district game, and not the Golden Eagles aren't winless on the season. The Golden Eagles are 3-0 on the season and travel to Bates Creek this Friday to take on the Commodores. A win over Bates Creek would catapult the Johnson Central program.

Coach Bill Musick has already turned the corner for the football program, after giving the program a rebirth of sorts back in 1992. Since 1992 Musick has done wonders for the program.

Last year the Eagles were right in the game when they played the Commodores, only to see the game slip away late in the third quarter.

This year's Bates Creek-Johnson Central game will definitely be interesting. Good luck to the Golden Eagles.

That's all for now. Remember to get out and support our local gridiron teams.

Time is running out

by STEVE MICKEY

The running of Darlington's Southern 500 signals that the Winston Cup schedule is now in its stretch run with only 10 races remaining. When you can begin counting the races left on your fingers, it means that now every pass on the race track will be calculated to see just how many precious Winston Cup points can be picked up as drivers now begin to keep one eye on the scoreboard.

Bobby Labonte, Dale Jarrett, Dale Earnhardt, Jeff Burton and Rusty Wallace are five drivers left in points battle that still have a legitimate shot of making it to the head table at the Winston Cup awards banquet in New York. Bobby Labonte and Jeff Burton have yet to make a stretch run with the pressure of leading the point standings and it will be interesting to see just how the two handle every move they make on the track being scrutinized.

Leading the point standings as the races begin to dwindle to a precious few can take its toll not only on the driver but the teams as well. This is where Earnhardt, Jarrett and Wallace may have an advantage as each has won a championship and knows what to expect as the season draws to an end.

Labonte, along with his crew chief, Jimmy Makar, knows that all it takes is one bad race to see the championship slip away. With that thought in mind the two are saying that they are taking it one race at a time and not trying to get caught up in point counting while a race is going on.

A look at the stats for the season shows Labonte and Makar have been doing a great job of getting the best finish they can from every race. If you are going to win races and championships you have to be around at the end of a race and Labonte has done just that. He has yet to register a DNF and has run an amazing 99.9 percent of all of the laps run so far this season.

Even with all the success that Labonte has had so far this season, he may still not be the favorite to win the championship. The 10 tracks left on the schedule provide a wide range of racing from short tracks to restrictor plate tracks which really test the skills of every driver in the championship hunt.

If you look at the individual results from the tracks that are still left on the schedule then you might want to favor Earnhardt to win his eighth Winston Cup championship. The Goodwrench driver has posted a total of 41 wins on the remaining tracks and drives for an owner that has been through all of the pressures associated with a championship run.

Even though Rusty Wallace is several hundred points out of the top spot, don't count him out just yet. He enters this stretch run with as much momentum as any driver and has to like the tracks that are left on the schedule. The tracks that will play host for the final 10 races have been the site of 26 Wallace victories. His only nemesis on the schedule will be the restrictor plate races at Talladega. Although he is yet to win a race on either Daytona or Talladega, he has become very competitive the last couple of years.

You should never count out the defending champion and Dale Jarrett and his team know exactly what to expect as the pressure mounts and the number of races begin to slip away. He won his championship last season thanks to 24 top-five finishes in 34 races. Jarrett has been strong of late and likes the lineup of tracks still on the schedule.

Maybe the most overlooked factor in Labonte's championship run is the experience of his owner, Joe Gibbs. I know that he hasn't won a Winston Cup championship, but I do know that he has won the Super Bowl in the NFL. The Super Bowl has the most press coverage of any sporting event, plus with only a 16 game schedule, the must-win games come up quicker than on the racing schedule.

If the championship goes down to the last 500 miles at Atlanta, Labonte should really like his chances to win his first ever championship. The Georgia track just might turn out to be his trump card as he has won four of the last eight races.

TRACK & SPEED

Week Ahead in NASCAR • September 6, 2000

By HENRY MILLER Track & Speed

FOR Dale Earnhardt, maintaining focus is not as easy as it used to be. As Earnhardt eyes an unprecedented eighth Winston Cup title, it's imperative that The Intimidator doesn't allow himself to be distracted from closing in on the coveted title. "As you get more involved, you get more things going on in your life," says Earnhardt, third in the point standings. "Focusing on a championship and focusing on racing the way we do is a lot different than the way we used to do it."

Not only does Earnhardt have to concentrate on business with his No. 3 Goodwrench Chevrolet but he also has his irons in a bunch of other fires he must keep stoked. He's a businessman who owns car dealerships and other NASCAR teams, including the one driven by his son, Dale Jr. He's also a family man who is always quick to admit he's blessed with his wife, and business partner, Theresa.

"You have to have a great wife that understands and a great partner that helps you like Theresa does me," Earnhardt says. "That's what keeps me going. We're in the house at 8:30 for dinner, and after dinner we'll talk and may get to bed by midnight. Then we're up again at 5 in the morning going again."

Ironically, it's Sunday, the day that many assume is the most important day in a life of any driver, that ends up being Earnhardt's day at the beach, comparatively speaking.

"Sunday is a fun day," Earnhardt says. "Race day is a fun day. It's the time you work toward. That's what keeps me racing. The bottom line is when I get behind the steering wheel, I'm not happy where I'm at. I want to be closer to the front."

"Hopefully, that's what has gotten me here today and what will keep me here for a couple more years." But getting back into the heat of a championship battle hasn't been an easy task for the 49-year-old legend. The past two seasons Earnhardt has finished seventh and eighth in the point standings, and in 1997 he was winless for the first time since 1981. His back-to-back finishes outside of the top five hadn't been accomplished since he finished seventh, 12th and eighth in 1981, 1982 and 1983. "It's been a confidence boost," Earnhardt says of a season that has one win, eight top-five and 18 top-10 finishes, well on pace to surpass his 21 top 10s last year. "It's that feeling you get. I've got a race team that is solid and behind me, and they are there to win. They want to work with me and do the same things I do. It's not somebody that is trying to do something else. I think we have a really solid race team, one that wants to win."

And if the team puts Earnhardt in position to win, the crafty veteran usually knows how to pull through. Earnhardt has plenty of experience in tight points races, having been in four of the top 10 closest championship races in Winston Cup history. He won the championship by 19 points over Cale Yarborough in 1980 and won by 26 points over Mark Martin in 1990. Earnhardt also has finished second in two tight battles, 12 points behind Rusty Wallace in 1989 and 34 points behind Jeff Gordon in 1995.

And even though Bobby Labonte, the current points leader, has practiced what every Winston Cup champion has preached - that consistency is more important than wins to capture the points title - Earnhardt is confident that this race is far from over.

"You have to chip away at it," Earnhardt says of his deficit. "[Labonte's] race team is so solid. If you can gain 10, 15 or 20 points every race, you look around at the end of the day getting ready for Atlanta and you're still behind. But you're only 20 behind instead of 195. Then you got a shot at it."

"Anything can happen that last race. If we can just chip away at it and get close ... but you can't ponder it. You have to go on. You don't want to see Bobby have any bad luck, but it takes things like that. If I can just get him wondering ..."

Labonte is probably already wondering if Earnhardt has what it takes to win the championship. Right now, neither of them can afford to take their eyes off the road to victory.

EARNHARDT'S BID FOR AN EIGHTH CHAMPIONSHIP IS NO ILLUSION

Who will be the runner-up in the Busch Series race?

By TIM FONDE Track & Speed

THE race is on in the Busch Grand National Series. And Jason Keller is in the thick of it. Enjoying his best season ever, Keller is mixing it up with Todd Bodine and rookie upstart Kevin Harvick. Ron Hornaday and Elton Sawyer are also along for the ride in one of the tightest points battles in Busch Series history. There's only one problem: The tussle is for second place, not the Busch Series crown.

The crown is being fitted for Jeff Green, Keller's teammate, who held a nearly insurmountable, 589-point lead heading into last weekend's race at Darlington.

Keller doesn't mind. "You can't get wrapped up in that," Keller said of the chasm between first and second. "They have a great race team doing the things they need to do." Meanwhile, Keller's No. 57 Excedrin Monte Carlo unit can't get much stronger.

Keller, whose best finish in the Busch Series point standings was a fourth in 1995, has a win at Dover in June and 10 top-5s this season. His previous high for top-5s was six in 1995.

Keller said a tweak here and there could make the team better, but not much more is needed. "I don't know how much better it can be," Keller said of his race team. "I think we are at that point where if we start winning races, we won't know what changed."

"I'm finishing third, fourth or fifth ever week during the summer and am losing points." While Green's runaway may sap some of the drama out of the last third of the season, Keller said that's a good thing. Green's No. 10 NesQuik Monte Carlo team has raised the bar to a new height, forcing the rest of the series to work harder.

And when that points leader is your teammate, the motivation is even stronger.

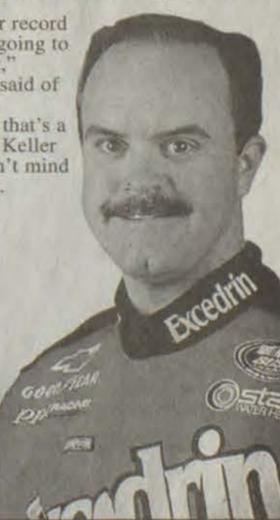

"We just try and keep up with him," Keller said of Green. "You can't take anything away from any part of their race team. And Jeff's helped me to have a whole better season than I've ever had. [Our] relationship has grown. We had a really great year last year and a great year this year."

Keller has a fan in Green, who has been in his teammate's position before. In 1999, Green finished second to Dale Earnhardt Jr., who won the Busch Series title by nearly 300 points. Green also had top-5 finishes in 1995 and 1996, but was at least 500 points behind the champ each time.

"If they can pull off second, that's another record we're going to look at," Green said of Keller.

And that's a record Keller wouldn't mind having.

"I've actually gone out and asked people, 'What is it I've done?' Cocky and that I'm hard to get along with were the answers I got back."

- Mike Wallace, referring to not getting an opportunity to drive on the Winston Cup circuit

Fast Fact

Darrell Waltrip holds the modern-era (1972-1999) record for most consecutive seasons winning a race from the pole on a short track, winning at least one a year for seven consecutive years, from 1978 to 1984.

The truth is out there

I'VE been on a mission. As all of you know, my allegiances sit with the great driver of the No. 24 DuPont Chevrolet. Yes, Jeff Gordon. The three-time Winston Cup champ, the greatest driver of his time, the ... well, you get the idea.

So I've agonized, probably more so than he, over the subpar performance of the sport's greatest personality, driver, spokesman ... Oh, sorry. I'm doing it again, aren't I?

So last weekend, I opted to skip Darlington and do a little undercover work.

What I found will shock you. (Where were Mulder and Scully when I needed them?)

Yes ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, it's true: Jeff Gordon is not really Jeff Gordon.

He's an alien.

I've almost gathered enough proof to make everyone believe.

There are other life forms. They are out there.

Jeff, being the strong one that he is, has fought through this hostile takeover of his body. We saw him dominate the field at Talladega and Sonoma.

But it wasn't until his profanity match with Tony Stewart that I knew - not just guessed, but knew - that this wasn't the Jeff Gordon we all know and love.

This was an impostor.

How are we going to get Jeff back? I'm not sure. But I'm going to make it a personal mission to get to the bottom of this.

I will leave no stone unturned. I'll get the proof I need.

And you thought I was going to come up with some crazy excuse for Gordon's problems, didn't you?

Now, my picks for Richmond: 1. Rusty Wallace. Too good right now; 2. Tony Stewart; 3. Mark Martin. Watch out for the Roush cars the next few weeks. They'll either get really good or really bad; 4. Jeff Burton. I'm guessing really good; 5. Dale Jarrett.

Kentucky Sportsline...

Does Hal Mumme really think the Louisville game is not important?

Ofcourse not. He knows that the annual clash with the Cardinals is not just another game for his players. In fact, he knows that very well and he knows his players read newspapers, listen to radio and watch television and he doesn't want to send them a message in public that is different than what he says in private.

Alabama lost at home to Louisiana Tech last year, but ended up winning the SEC championship. Bama fans were devastated at the time of the Tech loss, but the players brushed it aside and were able to upset Florida a couple of weeks later. Losing to in-state rival like Louisville won't equate to a loss to Louisiana Tech, but the point is that one game, especially one outside the conference, can't be the end-all to a season if you ever want your team to start thinking like the teams that win championships.

That's the point Mumme wants to get across to his team — that the most important things are trying to win an SEC title and trying to get to a bowl game. For fans, the Louisville game is like a bowl game, but Mumme wants them to see it only as a means to achieving their goals.

That's what he was trying to say after last Saturday's game. He's been trained as a football coach, not a speechwriter, so maybe he didn't say it as well as he could have and one sentence ends up becoming a headline that upsets even Kentucky fans.

I predicted a blowout win for Kentucky based on my expectations for an improved UK defense and a U-of-L offense that might struggle to replace players like Chris Redman, Ibn Green and Frank Moreau. Well, the Wildcats played poorly on defense or Louisville's replacements failed to miss a beat or a combination of the two. Give credit to John L. Smith and company.

But losing to Louisville is no disgrace anyway. The best team in Conference USA year in and out is Southern Miss and they annually play SEC teams well while also doing it on the road (see last week's 19-16 loss to Tennessee in Knoxville). Yes, I would rank the SEC well ahead of C-USA overall, but the gap is not so wide that a loss by an SEC team should be considering shocking.

Does losing to Louisville hurt recruiting? No more so than any other loss. If you lose too often, you get hurt in recruiting, but if Kentucky rights the ship and sails to a third straight bowl game, then no recruit is going to care even a little bit about what happened last Saturday. They care about things like New Year's Day bowls and national TV exposure and big stadiums.

Mumme knows the game was important last Saturday. But it was important because you only get to play 11 games and UK is now 0-1. And as the coach, he must do his best to make sure his players understand that any despair from losing to Louisville or euphoria from beating the Cardinals must end when the next week of practice begins.

ed," said Perry Bozarth of Lexington, comptroller for Sallee Horse Vans.

"Just the love of Kentucky football," explained Dr. Robert Sims about his reason for signing up. He's an orthodontist in Nashville who doubles as president of the UK Alumni Association chapter in the Music City. And Dr. Sims is also the fan responsible for finding then UK basketball coach Rick Pitino's missing 1996 national championship ring (Sims noticed the ring on the hand of a worker at Puerto Rico resort where he was vacation-fantasy that had never been involved in high school football or had never coached a sport, when we walked in the locker room and it was like it is for the kids on Saturday, it was like deer in the headlights. It kinda got to me and I've been around this a long time. I think these guys got the feeling of what the kids feel like when they walk in that locker room," observed Bob Comstock, a retired Louisville businessman now living in Florida. Comstock even brought his sons along to enjoy the experience.

Each member of the coaching staff took the campers through drills that the players at the different positions experience on a daily basis in practice. Mumme, for example, explained the throwing motion they like to see from the Kentucky quarterbacks, telling them throwing darts is a good technique for youngsters to use to simulate the proper form.

"The great thing about our system is that nothing changes. Every Monday is the same, every Tuesday is the same and so on. You're really able to perfect your fundamentals. If you can get better at that fundamental than the guy you're going against, then you've got a better chance to win," Mumme said during his session.

And defensive coordinator Mike Major explained why he is flexible on things like whether a player likes to attack from the standup position or a three-point stance but is rigid when it comes to drill work.

"Regimentation is not going to win you a lot of football games. Discipline is what is going to win you football games. And you get discipline by doing the same thing over and over again till your body don't feel like doing it," Major told them. "I never saw where breaking a huddle won you a football game."

After the drills, the fantasy campers heard a detailed scouting report on season-opening opponent Louisville and recruiting coordinator Claude Bassett gave them a step-by-step look at the wooing of a prospect. But the highlight of the weekend came on Saturday night, when the campers returned to the stadium to recreate two of the great plays of the Mumme era—Tim Couch's game-winning overtime TD pass to Craig Yeast in the 1997 Alabama game and Matt Mumme's fake punt pass to Gary Davis to turn the tide in the '98 comeback win over Indiana. Then, a video of the day's activities was shown on the stadium scoreboards.

"We tried to make it as realistic as we could for them," Mumme said. "It sounds ridiculous, but it really was a lot of fun."

Nationally, Kentucky has the reputation of being a "basketball state," but Franklin, a native of Princeton in western Kentucky, says this is a "Wildcat state" and he's not surprised at the passion UK's recent gridiron success has generated.

"I've always thought that," Franklin said. "If we were having a bow-and-arrow contest against Tennessee in the parking lot, people would come."

ing).

"I've always been a Kentucky football fan, but what coach Mumme has done with the program since he got here is just tremendous," Dr. Sims added.

"There's more excitement about Kentucky football than there's ever been in my life and I'm 40-years old. Just to be able to touch and see what goes on from the inside (is special). One of my most religious experiences occurred here in 1997 when we got up 21-nothing on Louisville. Some of us looked at each other and said 'is this Kentucky football?' We had tears in our eyes.

We had gone through these 3-to-nothing games (in the past)."

The camp's roster even include a federal judge, Henry Wilhoit of Grayson.

"Number one, I am a longtime Kentucky fan. Number two, I'm a fan of coach Mumme.

I believe his system, regardless of who the players are going to be, will produce winning football here at Kentucky," Wilhoit said, who saw his first UK game in 1949 at Stoll Field. "It certainly helps the university. It attracts people to the university and helps raise funds and that's very important. I never played one game of organized football, but I love it. Federal judges have to behave themselves and all we can do is watch TV and go to ballgames.

Fantasy campers arrived on a Friday evening and had a chance to informally mix with Mumme and his coaches after dinner.

On Saturday, the group arrived at Commonwealth Stadium to find their names on placards above lockers in the room where the team gets ready for games. Inside, they found a variety of UK practice and game attire, including a jersey with a number and their name on it.

"One thing that really hit me — a lot of the guys that came to that

FANTASY CATS

Here's a clear signal of just how far the Kentucky football program has advanced under coach Hal Mumme: last month, 40 men of varying ages who share the common bond of total devotion to the UK gridiron program paid $1,100 to attend a weekend fantasy camp with Mumme and his coaching staff.

Tony Franklin, the Wildcats' offensive coordinator and wide receivers coach, got the idea from a buddy who coaches at Auburn. Tigers' coach Tommy Tuberville actually began the concept when he was at Ole Miss and David Cutcliffe has kept it going, meaning Kentucky is one of only three SEC teams to launch a project of this type.

"Goodwill," Franklin responded, when asked about the reason the entire UK football staff, support personnel included, embraced this idea. "Those guys are doing things that our great athletes do and it teaches them a greater appreciation. It's a way of saying 'thank you' to some people that have been really good to us, by letting them know things that other people will never know.

"I think probably the biggest thing is getting to know us (as coaches-slash-people)," he continued. "I was hoping to have at least 20. I thought 30 would be great for the first year."

But never underestimate the passion for Kentucky football, a school that has played before crowds averaging more than 50,000 fans per game even before Mumme and company made bowl trips more than just a dream.

"I bleed Kentucky so much and I've always wanted to be part of the program in some way. I think all of us have a little kid at heart and this rekindles that. I played high school football and officiated for 13 years and I got to know some of the coaches and I just want to help any way I can.

"It's been more (fun than expect-

The sand will get in your shoes.
 The rest will get in your soul.

"I remember straining my eyes. For miles and miles Mom and Dad said it was coming, but as hard as I looked, all I could see was a seemingly endless blur of passing trees and houses. Nothing. Then, in a quick moment, I thought I saw a flash of blue. Suddenly, the whole world seemed to open up and there it was—the most incredible sugar-white sand and emerald-colored water I'd ever seen. I've been back to Gulf Shores a million times in my life since—each trip in its own new way reminds me of that special first visit."

Pikeville

has been busy practicing at the Mullins school for the past month now. Two-a-day practices and early-Saturday morning scrimmages have made 70-plus young men realize so much. The 70-plus young men playing football means Pikeville College has the opportunity to begin an NAIA college football tradition at a school that has been without football for so long.

The football talent ushered into the Pikeville College football program for this inaugural season is a good mix of all of the necessary ingredients for a good small college football team. Coach Willis and his staff were able to go out and get the best available in-state talent while getting the best available talent from out of state.

"When we set out to recruit, we wanted to get the best available in-state football players that we could get," said Willis. "The first priority in our recruiting is to recruit the in-state kids. The Pikeville community and the surrounding communities have been so gracious in welcoming this football program. Now it's our turn to go out and get this football program off to a successful start."

Names that dot the 2000 Pikeville College football roster indicate the talent is there. With hard work and more and more team unity showing with each practice, the football Bears should make waves throughout the 2000 junior varsity club team season.

The time to step up is here and the Pikeville College football team has the athletes to do just that. Belfry graduate Jonathan Wright is one prized in-state recruit Pikeville College was fortunate enough to land. The strong-armed Wright (6-3, 235) had received offers from NCAA power Marshall University as well as Kentucky State.

Wright will see plenty of time at quarterback for the Bears, along with another athletic signal-caller who hails from Tennessee. Scott Branton (6-4, 190) from Maryville, Tenn., will be competing with Wright for time under center. Both should see considerable time at the position throughout the junior varsity season.

J.J. Bailey (5-10, 240), a bowling ball of a running back, has looked good in pre-season. The Pikeville High School alum had quite a prep football career.

Prestonsburg's Adam Bailey (6-6, 270) will be a big force on the offensive line for the Bears. Bailey will start the Georgetown game at right offensive tackle. The Prestonsburg native is one of the most athletic linemen on the PC football roster. Bailey was a standout on both the offensive and the defensive line at Prestonsburg High School in the mid- to late-1990s.

Another former Blackcat, Hank Mullins (5-7, 160), will see time in the Pikeville College defensive secondary. Mullins signed on with the Bears after graduating from Prestonsburg High this past year.

A junior varsity season gives Willis a lot of room for substitutions and experiments. Pikeville College will have one initial season of playing as a junior varsity club team before making the move to the NAIA's Mid South Conference.

The Georgetown College football team is currently ranked number two in the most recent NAIA poll. Taking on the junior varsity squad of a team with such a high ranking team will definitely get the young Pikeville College football program up and ready to play.

Going out and defeating a number two ranked team would bode even better.

"Opening up with Georgetown College's JV team is a great way for us to get this thing started," said Willis. "The Mid South Conference is in my opinion the best conference in NAIA football, so to open up with both an NAIA power and a Mid South Conference power will definitely give our players a feeling of how prestigious the Mid South Conference. We're just excited about getting started this season."

The Pikeville College football program kicks off the inaugural 2000 junior varsity club season at 7 p.m. Thursday at Rawlings Stadium against the Georgetown Tigers. Dreams can come true. Thursday continues a dream become reality for everyone close to the newly formed Pikeville College football program.

Retired teacher trades classroom for

by Willie Elliott
 STAFF WRITER

Retired teacher Barry Dean Martin of Prestonsburg is an avid sportsman who had added an extra niche to the sport — he models for sports photographs for national sports writer Soc Clay.

If you happened to see the summer issue of the sports magazine "Mid-Atlantic Sportsman," you were greeted by Martin as he sets up a fishing photo for Clay. Martin is shown catching a rainbow trout on the Cheat river in West Virginia.

Back in June 1993, Martin and his paddling buddy Bobby Allen, also a retired teacher, were shown on the cover of "Ontario Out of Doors." The eye-catching photo presents the two canoeists in silhouette as they fly fish.

The nature of the photo makes it hard to identify Martin and Allen. But both affirm that the shot is, indeed, of them, as they paddle on the lake. In the same issue, Martin holds a nice trout for photographing purposes.

In the July/August issue of "Heartland USA," Martin is included with other models to accompany a story about bird hunting, with the birds taking center stage and the models used to display the birds in the most flattering poses.

Martin explains that after he retired, he needed something to do other than filing old family pictures and doing genealogical research, so he returned to his favorite hobby, doing outdoor

(See OUTDOORS, page three)

If you browse through outdoors magazines, don't be surprised if you recognize a fellow in one of the pictures. It just might be Floyd County's own Barry Dean Martin. He occasionally makes the cover and more frequently is featured inside in story illustrations. The former teacher is also an avid outdoorsman, who's not above clowning around with the catch.

Sharing the name

While Wilma and I were eating at a local fast-food restaurant a while back, I picked up one of those little cards that asks customers to rate the service and food—which I never take the time to do; if I don't like it, I don't go back.

Anyway, as I, for no particular reason, was looking at the card, I noticed that the company's corporate office was in Williamsport, Maryland.

I hadn't known until then that there was a Williamsport in Maryland. I'd been aware of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, because that's where the Grit (what I believed to be the only newspaper in the world until I was about 10 years old) is published and the Little League World Series is played.

I certainly knew of Williamsport, Kentucky, because that's where my alma mater, Meade Memorial High School, is, and it's also where I got Wilma.

I couldn't keep from wondering, though, just how many more Williamsports there were. I did a little research and discovered that there are actually six, the other three being in Ohio, Indiana and Tennessee.

Naturally, this led me to wonder about some of the other familiar place names and just how familiar they might be to folks in other places.

I nosed a bit further and uncovered some fascinating facts. First, though, I satisfied my ego a tad. For instance, since I'm Clyde, I've always known (or at least I can't remember when I didn't know) that there is a Clyde, Texas. I think I learned that from an old John Wayne movie.

But did you know there is also a Clyde, Kansas? A Clyde, Michigan? A Clyde, Missouri? A Clyde, New York? A Clyde, North Carolina? And, a Clyde, Ohio? And just for kickers, there's also a Clyde Park, Montana. If I lived there, my address would be Clyde Pack, Clyde Park, Montana. Someday when I retire from this retirement job, I think I'd like to visit all these places.

Anyway, my appetite was really whetted by now. So, I did a little more digging and found that, sure enough many places across the country have copied their names from eastern Kentucky communities.

For instance, not only is there an Allen in Floyd County, but there's also one in Alabama, Iowa, Maryland, Michigan, Nebraska, Special request...

Geneva Ward of Prestonsburg is excited about her teaching job at the Wesley Christian School in Allen that is operated by Christ United Methodist Church. The school continues to grow each year, and Geneva thinks she has the finest group of children in her kindergarten class.

Being a Christian school, they have devotional times and the children are invited to share their prayer requests. They bring whatever concerns they have and seem to like remembering their little friends and their families, especially if one of them should be sick.

As they were preparing for prayer time one day, Geneva allowed time for them to express their concerns and mention things they wanted to pray about, but one student, J. D. Adams, remained very quiet. She said, "What about you, J. D., don't you have a request today?"

"Oh yes, Miss Ward," he enthused, "I have a very special request, and it's for my grandfather." Knowing his grandfather was Dr. James Adams, she said, "I'm so sorry if your grandfather is sick, and we'll surely pray for him."

"No, he isn't sick," J. D. replied. "I just want to pray that he can grow some hair on his head. He doesn't have much at all, and he needs to grow some more."

An answer in sight

Hannah Fitzpatrick of Banner is an almost-grown-up young lady who will be celebrating her 10th birthday later this month. She lives on

SMALL WORLD by Aileen Hall

Daniels Creek Road with her parents, Chris and Maria Fitzpatrick, and her younger brother Cameron.

Hannah attends Mountain Christian Academy in Martin. She is a member of the Kentucky Opry Junior Pros and has performed with the Jenny Wiley Children's Theater.

But a few years ago, when Hannah was almost five, she was attending a Bible class taught by Betty Porter of Prestonsburg. Near the end of their study, Hannah asked if she might say the closing prayer and Betty told her that would be fine.

She prayed for her parents and grandparents, for her baby brother and many of her friends, mentioning each one by name. Just when she seemed to be winding down, she remembered to ask for one other special need. "And Lord," she prayed, "Would you please help my grandfather to be able to quit smoking? He really would like to quit, Amen."

Just as she rose to her feet, a little boy sitting beside her said, "You can get that Nico-Derm CQ, and it makes it easy to quit smoking."

Hannah sat right back down and began again, "Dear Lord, please help me know where to find that Nico-Derm CQ."

Make it soon

Special get-well wishes go to Sam Meade of Stanville who is recuperating from open heart surgery. His wife, Mariedith Furman Meade, taught school at Betsy Layne Elementary for several years before retiring. They're both glad to have Mariedith's sisters, Beth and Teenie Furman who are nurses, to help with the recovery.

Good wishes, too, to Dena McNally of Prestonsburg, who is confined to home with a serious illness. She and husband, C. J. have a houseboat at the same dock as ours on Lake Cumberland, but Dena hasn't been able to get there all summer. She has a batch of friends who are missing her and hoping she'll be able to get back soon.

Sara Bakay was among 39 local youths who participated in the Kids' Health Kamp, sponsored again this summer by Our Lady of the Way Hospital. The youngsters did arts and crafts activities, as well as swimming, putting on shows, attending a play, going on a scavenger hunt and dozens of other things. Look for more photos from the unusual camp in future editions of the Times.

activities. "Soc needed someone to photograph, and I had a garage full of hunting and fishing props," Martin said. Thus the photographer/model relationship was formed. Clay is a freelance writer and photographer who sells his stories and photos all over the world. There is no pay for Martin and his cohorts — "just food for the ego and prime spots to hunt and fish." The relationship started when Fred Hall, president of the eastern Kentucky chapter of Trout Unlimited, introduced Martin to Clay. Clay lives in South Shore, near Ashland, and is the regional editor for "Outdoor Life" and was instrumental in forming the local chapter of "Trout Unlimited." Clay also contributes to other magazines including "Kentucky Afield, the Magazine," "Woods and Water," "Kentucky Game and Fish," "Fly Fishing Quarterly," "Massachusetts Sportsman," "West Virginia Afield," "Outdoor Life" and others. Martin's photo could show up in any of those magazines. Martin said photos that appear in these magazines sometimes do not show enough of the model for identification. For example, on page 26 of the May 2000 issue of "Sports Afield," Martin is holding a fish — but only his hands are showing. "If you don't believe I caught that fish, ask me," Martin joked about the photo. Martin said all photos that appear in outdoor magazines are staged to present the most appealing image to the public.

Martin said the photos are taken in low light of sunset or sunrise, have no cocked hats, or the fish or animals have no blood on them. "In this surreal setting, we enjoy the beautiful pictures in outdoor magazines. The only critics are those people who read 'Playboy' and believe those models wear those tiny bikinis." While Martin gets no pay for these services, he does get to fish and hunt at prime locations. Martin said the next time Clay calls needing more outdoor photos, he (Martin) will round up the equipment and head to the selected spot.

Motor vehicle crashes and lacking sleep

by FREDERICK M. BARON & PENNY GOLD

As Edward Lee Rogers' Volvo crested a hill, a van coming from the opposite direction crossed into his lane and struck his car, instantaneously ending Roger's life. The driver of the van was not drunk, the weather was not bad, and it was not late at night. The driver of the van was on his way home—two miles from his home—when he fell asleep. The high school junior had pulled an all-nighter, had not eaten all day and then gone to baseball practice. He was at the tail-end of a somewhat typical day in the life of a high school student. And as a result, Ailene Rogers is a widow. Unfortunately, according to the National Safety Council, this high school junior belonged to a group of drivers that has the statistics stacked against it: Motor vehicle crashes are the leading cause of death for people between the ages of 15 and 20. In 1998, 6,400 Americans between the ages of 15 and 20 died in car accidents. Teen-age drivers hold 6.9 percent of the nation's licenses, but are involved in 14 percent of total fatal crashes. What contributes to so many fatalities on the roadways? Experts point to a variety of sources.

Alcohol is undoubtedly one. The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration (NHTSA) estimates that there were 2,210 alcohol-related deaths of people between the ages of 15 and 20 in 1998. Another factor in many accidents—coming as a surprise to many—is the number of passengers in the car. A recent study published by the Journal of the American Medical Association, (JAMA), found that teens driving with a carload of friends have been found more than twice as likely to be involved in a fatal crash than those driving alone. The JAMA article found that the "highest death rate (5.61 per 10 million trips) was observed among drivers aged 16, years carrying 3 or more passengers." Time of day is also a factor, with the most crashes occurring late at night and in the early hours of the morning. According to JAMA, "[t]he highest driver death rate for 16- and 17-year-old drivers, 21.88 per 10 million trips, was for drivers traveling with passengers between midnight and 5:59 a.m." Yet, even if your son or daughter is sober, traveling alone and driving during daylight hours, he or she can still be overcome by fatigue, as in the case of the young man mentioned above. Drivers aged 15-24 account for over half of the exhaustion-related accidents annually, according to an article in the Washington Post. David Dinges, a psychologist at the University of Pennsylvania, was quoted in the February 6, 2000, article as saying, "We have an epidemic of fall-asleep crashes among our kids...It's killing people." Experts agree that the first step to keeping teen-age drivers safe is conversation. Parents should talk to their children about the dangers of the road—especially those that depend on smart driver behavior. For information on drowsy driving, check the NHTSA's website at www.nhtsa.gov. To find statistics on drunken driving, consult the Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) website at www.madd.org. While it is impossible to completely control the conditions under which our children drive, by discussing the responsibilities and dangers, as well as perks, that come with a license we can keep our families safe. For more health and safety information and tips, visit ATLA's "Keep Our Families Safe" Web site at <http://familysafety.atla.org>. Frederick M. SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette smoke contains carbon monoxide.

Going online for advice about Acne

(NAPSA)-On the surface, acne may look like just a few pimples, but this common skin condition can cut deeply into a teenager's self-image. Research has shown that this embarrassing rite of passage can impact a teen's social life and school work, and even cause depression.

"Acne can erode a teenager's self-image and confidence, at a sensitive time in their personal growth and development," says Donna Ford, president of the American Counseling Association

(ACA), the world's largest private, non-profit organization for professional counselors. "However, of all the challenges facing teens, acne is one problem that they can easily do something about."

In order to help teens do something about it, the ACA is hosting a web site on acne for teenagers and their parents. Accessible at www.counseling.org/teenacne, the site offers medically accurate information about the causes of acne, the "dos" and "don'ts" in managing the condition, and a synopsis of available treatments. Actress Lindsay Price, star of TV's "Beverly Hills 90210," helped launch the site by having an online chat session with teens about acne, and how celebrity and fashion help shape their self-image.

"The Internet is the information medium of choice for teenagers," says Ms. Ford, noting that the number of teens online in the U.S. is estimated at 9 million. "They use the web to e-mail friends, shop and do research for school, so we felt it was the ideal way to provide reliable information and reassurance about acne."

Seeking Medical Treatment
 Acne develops when certain hair follicles become clogged by skin cells that block the opening of pores. A number of factors beyond a teenager's control, including age, heredity, hormonal changes and stress, contribute to the development of acne.

One piece of advice that the site offers teenagers who are concerned about their acne is that they should talk with their parents about seeing a doctor. "The good news is that doctors now have a variety of effective medications available to address the problem," said Sharon Levy, M.D., Director of Medical Affairs and Clinical Research for Dermik Laboratories, Inc.

One topical medication that has been shown to treat acne rapidly is Benzamycin®, a combination of the anti-microbial benzoyl peroxide and the antibiotic erythromycin. Clinical study shows that Benzamycin® can produce improvements in acne in as little as two weeks. As with other topical acne medications, local irritation has been reported with Benzamycin use.

It is important to keep in mind that no acne medication has been approved, or is used for, the treatment of any psychological condition, including depression.

It is also important for teens to know that they are not alone or singled out when it comes to acne-about 85 percent of people between the ages of 12 and 25 are affected by the condition. As Lindsay Price tells teens, "The myth that only geeky, nerdy teenagers get acne is completely untrue. Movie stars get acne, I get acne, it's completely normal and you shouldn't feel embarrassed."

Hamilton Beach rescues families on the go Brochure offers healthy drink alternatives to fast food fare

When you look at families today, it's not uncommon to see children maintain schedules just as busy, if not busier, than their parents—which means many meals are eaten on the fly.

However, just because you're eating on the go, doesn't mean you can't eat healthy, or that it can't come from your own kitchen.

For a healthy simple meal on the run, consider creating a fruit smoothie, power drink or juice drink in a blender or juicer. Made from ingredients found in the average household refrigerator, these powerful drinks are not only portable but also can pack in nearly a day's worth of fruits and vegetables in addition to protein, fiber and calcium.

Hamilton Beach now offers consumers a free brochure, "On-the-Go Healthy Drinks," including recipes for delicious smoothies, power drinks and juice drinks including Cantaloupe Cooler, Cran-Kiwi Zing, Mango-Yogurt Cooler, Veggie Stand and Liquid Fire. The brochure also offers serving suggestions and tips and hints for preparation.

Consumers can receive a free copy of the Hamilton Beach, "On-the-Go Healthy Drinks," brochure by sending a business size, self-addressed stamped envelope to Hamilton Beach Healthy Drinks Offer, 4421 Waterfront Drive, Glen Allen, VA 23060.

USDA to provide $5.5 billion in supplemental AMTA payments

Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman has announced that starting September 1, USDA will begin making $5.5 billion in supplemental payments to about 1.4 million producers.

"These payments, part of a $7.1 billion relief package, will help our nation's farmers weather these difficult times," said Glickman. "Even with these payments, and other assistance USDA is providing, there remain serious, long-term, structural problems in American agriculture."

"The Clinton-Gore Administration has repeatedly said that the 1996 Farm Bill does too little to help farmers during bad times. The pain felt in farm country today is evidence that the 1996 Farm Bill is fundamentally inadequate and a stronger farm safety net is desperately needed."

USDA's Commodity Credit Corporation will issue payments to those farmers who received a final fiscal year 2000 Production Flexibility Contract (PFC) payment: sometimes called Agricultural Market Transition Act payments or AMTA payments.

These payments will be automatically paid to eligible farmers, who will not have to file any forms or visit any offices.

Have you considered opening a Roth IRA yet?

by J.R. BLACKBURN

When you're planning your retirement, don't overlook one of the most favorable investment accounts available to you today—the Roth IRA. The Roth IRA has been available for only a few years, and it appears too good to be true. How many other accounts offer you the following benefits and advantages?

Contributions are always available. This means you can withdraw them with no tax consequences or tax penalties. That's right, your Roth IRA contribution is never tied up. As an account owner, you can withdraw your contributions at any time.

All earnings and gains grow without tax. There's no current income tax on earnings and gains while your investments remain in your Roth IRA.

Distributions of earnings and gains are tax free. As long as five years have passed since the year of your first Roth IRA contribution (the "five-year holding period") and you're over 59 1/2, you may take distributions from your account without tax or penalty. (Withdrawals before age 59 1/2 may incur a 10 percent penalty tax.)

First-time home buyers may take a tax-free and penalty-free distribution at any age, provided the Roth account has met the five-year holding period. (The lifetime limit for this purpose is $10,000.)

If used for qualified higher education expenses, taxable distributions of earnings taken before age 59 1/2 are taxable but not subject to the 10 percent premature distribution tax penalty.

There is no required minimum distribution. Your Roth IRA assets continue to grow on a tax-favored basis for your heirs if you do not withdraw funds from your account.

Distributions to your beneficiaries are tax free, provided your account meets the five-year holding period.

These Roth IRA advantages help you to invest for a comfortable retirement as well as for your other major financial goals.

You are eligible for the Roth IRA if you have earned income and you fit either of these descriptions:

- An individual wage earner who has earned income of at least $2,000. You may make the maximum annual $2,000 contribution if your Adjusted Gross Income (AGI) is less than $95,000. (Individuals with an AGI between $95,000 and $110,000 may make a partial contribution.)
- A joint filer with an AGI of up to $150,000. If this applies to your situation, you can contribute the $2,000 maximum amount for yourself and $2,000 for your spouse. (Joint filers with AGIs between $150,000 and $160,000 may make partial contributions.)

Discuss with your financial advisor whether a Roth IRA is for you and talk to your tax advisor before making any tax-related investment decisions.

PART II: MECHANICS

Are you under stress? Using analytical deduction from problem solving class, a situation is viewed by who, what, where, when and why. We have already decided who is Stress. What is stress, an electrical impulse generated by the body as a response to a physical or emotional stimulus.

It is now necessary to take on the where and when of stress.

Where does stress happen? In the brain, attached to the brain stem is our limbic system. This system is fully developed at birth and produces the hormone that turns on our stress response. Our stress response is a triggered fight or flight mechanism.

The frontal cortex located at the front of the brain attempts to send messages to the limbic system to communicate and control the pathways of our emotions. Our frontal cortex is not fully developed until we reach our 30s. The degree of development is based on the environment and conditioning we receive throughout our lives.

To get a clearer picture of someone, you must study human nature. Human nature takes into consideration the many contributing factors that affect our lives.

When analyzing human nature consider the environment, physical and social emotional state, surrounding influences and personal self-thinking. As humans we are the ultimate animal, we possess the ability to adjust to any situation over time. Research continues to discover elements that affect how we react to any given condition.

But everyone can develop a systematic approach to dealing with stress, but first we must be aware of what causes stress and how to determine if you are under stress.

Some main symptoms of negative stress are fatigue, back problems, frequent headaches, weight fluctuations and gastrointestinal problems. Fatigue generally comes from lack of sleep; your emotional state can distract the body from resting. Back problems arise from not getting enough exercise; an example is working in an environment that restricts movement by sitting for long periods of time. Gastrointestinal problems come from stress cutting off the blood flow to the intestinal area.

It is not uncommon to experience stress when your life has been hit with major events, such as personal crisis, job stress, difficult age-related transitions, jury duty and exposure to traffic.

An important functional issue most people are not aware of with stress is blood fat. Stress sets off hormones in the body to release blood fat. Blood fat is the extra fat dumped into the body for energy. When your body feels the need to defend itself, blood fat provides the additional energy required to deal with the fight or flight response.

Stress puts the body through more than an emotional roller coaster. Handling stress is significant to your overall health and well being. Take a look at your environment and make it more system friendly; put up that basketball goal, punching bag or dartboard. Exercise your right to physical and emotional control.

OOPS: Our Mind, Body & Life Values Seminar is November 14 on a Tuesday. The Floyd County Chamber of Commerce has scheduled a grab-your-stress-by-the-horns-and-quadruple-your-memory-seminar, with Brad Humphrey, crisis psychologist of the Kentucky River Community.

Can you telecommute?

by Kentucky Society of CPAs

Q: I've asked my boss if I could telecommute instead of coming into the office, but she's a little hesitant. What does telecommuting involve and what are the benefits to the employer and the employee?

A: Telecommuting is the act of working at a remote location, usually at home, rather than traveling to and from an office. The number of telecommuters in the U.S. rose to 15.7 million as of mid-year 1998, according to research conducted by Cyber Dialogue, a New York based research and consulting firm.

Telecommuting was defined in the research as working at home for an outside employer during normal business hours a minimum of one day per month or more. Full-time employees who telecommute now total 7.4 million workers. These employees work an average of 18 hours per week at home, or about 2.5 days per week.

Almost half are employed by small businesses with less than 100 employees, while 1.8 million (24 percent) work for large companies with 1,000 or more employees.

Major findings of an International Telework Association & Council research study conducted in 1999 indicated that a minimum of $10,000 could be realized per telecommuter per year from recruitment and retention costs, reduced absenteeism, and increased productivity of those telecommuting only one day per week. The survey also found U.S. telecommuters now number 19.6 million or 10 percent of the adult population.

The number of telecommuters should continue to accelerate rapidly due to increasing affordability and, most importantly, vastly improving communication technologies.

From an organizational standpoint, telecommuting should be justified if the costs are balanced by the benefits. If the benefits exceed the costs, telecommuting should be actively promoted. A well-run telecommuting program should be at worst a break-even; that is, the telecommuters should do the same amount of work, at least as well, as in the office.

In almost all cases; though, their results are significantly better.

Several benefits derived from the employee's perspective include increased personal productivity due to more work per hour, reduced commuting time, better quality of personal life, improved personal productivity due to more work hours, better quality of work life, flexible work hours, and reduced costs of commuting.

Certain costs incurred while telecommuting may be deductible for tax purposes such as unreimbursed employee business expenses and the home office deduction. However, the home office deduction for an employee is permitted only in very limited situations and you should consult your CPA for further guidance.

Several benefits derived from the employer's perspective include increased employee productivity, increased employee morale, decreased occupancy rates, increased employee retention, higher customer satisfaction, easier employee recruitment, better corporate image and better communication between managers and workers.

Many companies are reluctant to adopt the flexible working arrangements inherent with telecommuting. The underlying problem is probably something to do with fear of loss of control, and mistrust of employees by managers. In a telecommuting environment, managers need to understand that they have to manage the work and not the employees.
