Alleged Slayer

Adams' wife and family have remained at home on Marshall's branch all these years. But during that time death has visited his home many times. First, his daughter died; then his eldest son, Chubb; a favorite grandson followed his daughter-in-law Mrs. Ma-

Adams, and only four months ago his sister, and the mother of the nephew he is alleged to have killed, died.

Adams stated he grew tired of evading the law, and his ill health, along with the grief over family deaths, caused him to send the sheriff word to meet him at Shelby. He surrendered and was taken to the Whitehouse to await trial.

trial, where he was admitted to bar

His captor stated that the construction of the Mayo Trail up Shelby had so changed the appearance of things at Adams' old home place on Marshall Branch that Adams failed to recognize it as they drove by on their way to
